Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 18 October 1990]: The Secretary of State has taken no such steps. The enforcement of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988, which implement Council directives 84/631/EEC and 86/279/EEC is the responsibility of the disposal authorities for the areas in which consignees operate their facilities, not the Secretary of State. The question of compliance with the Basel convention does not arise because the convention is not yet in force. However, the Secretary of State is pressing for the European Community and member states to move rapidly towards ratification.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any notification from ReChem International in regard to its plans to process 150 tonnes of toxic waste from the Karin B waste carrier ship.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 18 October 1990]: The Secretary of State has received copies of notifications under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations of a number of shipments of hazardous waste from Italy to ReChem International's plant at Fawley, Southampton. It is not possible to tell from the documents whether any of the waste was ever on board the Karin B. The purpose of notification is to establish whether the disposal facility can deal with the waste in question, not to give its history. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales receives copies of notifications of shipments of hazardous waste from Italy to ReChem International's plant at Pontypool.

Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his replies of 15 October, Official Report, column 622, if he will publish an edited version of the Garlick report with a view to providing public reassurance on matters dealt with by the full report, including those not covered by his statement of 29 August, while protecting the confidence of those who gave evidence.

Mr. Portillo: My answer of 15 October included a detailed statement which summarised Sir John Garlick's findings and the steps which the corporation and my Department are taking to address the shortcomings which he identified.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his replies of 15 October, Official Report, column 622, what steps he intends to take to ensure the implementation of the recommendations in the Garlick report; what steps have already been taken; and which matters have yet to be dealt with.

Mr. Portillo: My answer of 15 October set out the steps being taken as a result of the findings of Sir John Garlick's inquiry.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table setting out the top 20 local authorities whose rent arrears are the greatest.

Mr. Key: An ordered table showing rent arrears at March 1989 as a percentage of the rent roll for each English local authority was placed in the Library on 3 April 1990. Figures for March 1990 are not yet available.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the impact of the poll tax on the level of electoral registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There is no direct relation between the electoral register and the community charge register and there is no reason why the community charge should have any implication for electoral registration.

Water Leakage

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much water was lost through leakages in each water authority area during (a) 1989 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held centrally. Information for the former water authorities on water losses, which includes water lost by leakage, was published in the prospectus "The Water Share Offers", a copy of which is available in the Library. The Office of Water Services is developing guidelines for water companies so that the data they produce will allow effective consideration and comparison of water leakages.

Brookwood Hospital (Redevelopment)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the proposals for off-site highway works connected with the redevelopment of surplus land at Brookwood hospital, Knaphill, which has been formulated by Surrey county council and Woking borough council, fulfil the criteria recommended by his inspector in his report on the public inquiry into the development.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend is awaiting an undertaking about off-site highway works prior to reaching his final decision on the appeals concerning the redevelopment of land at Brookwood hospital. He will be replying very soon to my right hon. Friend's letter of 6 October on this matter.

Agricultural Dwellings

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he will take to prevent the fragmentation of farmland into non-viable units following the granting of planning permission for an agricultural dwelling.

Mr. Atkins: I am considering currently the whole subject of planning permission for agricultural dwellings in the light of the responses to the draft planning policy guidance note "The Countryside and the Rural Economy" which we issued for consultation last winter.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish new guidelines on the planning control of agricultural dwellings.

Mr. Atkins: On 5 October we issued a consultation paper on possible changes to planning controls over agricultural buildings other than dwellings. We shall want to consider the responses to that consultation before issuing a revised version of the planning policy guidance note "The Countryside and the Rural Economy"—PPG7—early next year. That note will also contain guidance on agricultural dwellings.

Passive Solar Design

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies have been sponsored by the Building Research Establishment to research and demonstrate the benefits of passive solar design in buildings; and what steps he is taking to increase the awareness of the benefits of such design among developers, designers and clients, as indicated in paragraph 40, page 289 of the White Paper on the environment (Cm. 1200).

Mr. Trippier: The Building Research Establishment is undertaking for my Department and for the Department of Energy's technology support unit a range of specific projects on passive solar design. These currently include studies on modelling methods, the use of daylight for passive solar energy and work on international and European research. Department of Energy research spending currently amounts to some £2 million a year.

To increase awareness of the benefits of passive solar design an integrated marketing programme is in preparation as part of the best practice programme of the Energy Efficiency Office.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department's property holding organisation will publish the environmental action guide on energy efficiency, as foreshadowed by paragraph C25, page 286, annex C of the White Paper on the environment (Cm. 1200); how many copies of this guide will be printed; at what estimated cost; and to which Departments of Government and associated organisations it will be distributed.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's Stationery Office hopes to publish the environmental action guide in December. It will provide an environmental framework for all aspects of property management and purchasing. The guide will be adopted across Government and will be on public sale for use by other organisations. The number of copies printed and their cost are commercial matters for HMSO.

Greenpeace

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received from Greenpeace; and how he intends to respond.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend received a letter from Lord Melchett, director of Greenpeace (UK) on 27 September. He replied by letter on 17 October 1990.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will finance research to assess the number sleeping rough in the United Kingdom, the causes and the demographic profile.

Mr. Key: The 1991 population census, to be carried out in England and Wales by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and in Scotland by the General Register Office for Scotland, will include a count of persons sleeping rough. The Northern Ireland Census Office will not be including a count of persons sleeping rough, as consultations with the charities dealing with the homeless suggest that the numbers involved are very small. My Department is in the process of commissioning a study of single homeless people which will include those who sleep rough in England.

Pollution Inspectorate (Annual Reports)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the 1988 annual reports of the 12 Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution district inspectors; and whether the new Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution regions will publish separate regional annual reports.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution district reports for 1988-89 have been published. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library. Regional chapters will be incorporated within HMIP's 1989-90 annual report.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been exempted from paying community charge (a) by each category of exemption, (b) in Leeds, West, and (c) in England and Wales.

Mr. Key: The categories for which information is available are given in the table. No information is available for Leeds, West. Figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Estimated numbers exempt from community charges in England at 1 June 1990

	Numbers
Members of visiting forces, international headquarters and defence organisations and their dependants. Including diplomats	40,000

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority district area the latest figures on the number of premises liable for the standard community charge.

Mr. Portillo: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Properties subject to a standard charge with a multiplier of zero are not included.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring is being undertaken by his Department on the operation of the rules relating to exemption from the poll tax for those suffering from severe mental impairment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My Department is in constant touch with local authorities on all aspects of the community charge. We also maintain close contact with officials in the Department of Health on issues relating to the exemption for persons with a severe mental impairment. Supplementary advice on the exemption was sent on 2 July 1990 to community charge registration officers and general medical practitioners from both Departments.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish the latest figures on the number of people who have been exempted from the poll tax due to (a) severe mental impairment, (b) residence in a hospital or home, (c) aged under 20 years at school or in further education, (d) membership of visiting forces, (e) persons in detention, (f) membership of a religious order, (g) homelessness and (h) others;

(2) if he will publish his best estimates of the number of people classified as suffering from mental illness who have been granted poll tax exemption under the severe mental impairment provisions;

(3) if he will publish his best estimates of the number of people classified as suffering from severe dementia who have been granted poll tax exemption under the severe mental impairment provisions.

Mr. Portillo: The estimated numbers exempt from community charges in England at 1 June 1990 are as follows:

	Number
Severely mentally impaired	97,000
Patients whose main residence is in an NHS hospital or people whose sole or main residence is in a residential care home, a nursing home, a mental nursing home, a private hospital, or a hostel providing a substantial level of care, and who are also being treated or cared for in such an institution	363,000

In detention	45,000
Members of visiting forces, international headquarters and defence organisations and their dependants. Including diplomats	40,000
Members of religious communities	11,000
Persons without fixed abode or living in short stay hostels	n.a.
Residential care workers employed at a very low salary, and full time students whose term time address is in Scotland or Northern Ireland	4,000

Note: Separate information is not available on the number of exemptions of people classified as suffering from severe dementia or mental illness.

n.a. Not available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will (a) place copies in the Library of all material produced by his Department designed to promote awareness of the right to poll tax exemption for certain groups of people and (b) state the level of expenditure being incurred on such material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Copies of all departmental published material on exemptions from the personal community charge, including circular letters sent out to all community charges registration officers have been placed in the Library.

The cost of producing this material has been approximately £1·2 million so far.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to introduce legislation to prevent district councils from recovering poll tax debts from individual housing benefit allocations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Legislation does not provide for local authorities to recover arrears of community charge from housing benefit.

Pollution Exhibition

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition by the Institution of Civil Engineers relating to pollution and its containment to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 3 to 7 December.

Environmental Protection Bill

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the regulations under part I of the Environmental Protection Bill will be issued for consultation.

Mr. Trippier: I have issued today draft regulations governing the application procedure for making authorisations under integrated pollution control and local authority air pollution control under part I of the Bill; the procedure for varying those authorisations; the appeals procedure; and details of the public registers of information. A copy of the regulations, and an accompanying guidance note, has been placed in the Library. Responses are required by 14 December.

The common theme throughout our proposals is the involvement of the public. Subject to the Bill being approved by Parliament and the results of the consultation, the regulations provide that applications for authorisations and substantial variations of those authorisations must be advertised so that the public has an opportunity to comment on the proposals. Those comments will then be considered in determining the application. The regulations also require appeals made under clause 15 of the Bill to be advertised so that the public has the opportunity to make representations which will be taken into account in determining the appeal. The information about applications for authorisations and variations, and appeals will be held on the comprehensive public registers of information which are also established under these regulations.

We intend to issue next month a further set of regulations, prescribing the substances and processes for control under part I of the Bill.

Barkby Thorpe Landfill Site

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the number of times Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has visited the landfill site at Barkby Thorpe, Leicester; and what are the dates of the visits;

(2) if he will publish the report of Her Majesty's inspector of pollution following his visit to the landfill site at Barkby Thorpe, Leicester.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: An inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution made one visit to the Barkby Thorpe site, Leicester in July 1989. The visit was made in conjunction with discussions held with local authority officials. No site visit report was prepared.

Beach Huts

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the application of the community charge to beach huts without a postal address, road access or connecting services.

Mr. Key: The standard community charge is payable by the freehold owner or lessee of a domestic property which is no person's sole or main residence. The Local Government Finance Act 1988 defines a building as domestic property if it is used wholly for the purposes of living accommodation. Whether or not a beach hut constitutes living accommodation will be a matter for the community charges registration officer to establish in the light of the facts of the case. It would be open to an individual to appeal against a registration officer's determination to a valuation and community charge tribunal.

Housing Conditions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of (i) unfit dwellings, (ii) dwellings fit but lacking basic amenities and (iii) non-standard dwellings in need of renovations in (a) Oldham, (b) the north-west and (c) England and the percentage of stock that these numbers represent in each case.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 18 October 1990]: Local authorities are asked for these figures in their annual housing investment programme returns; the figures are not necessarily comparable as authorities' criteria differ and they are not consistent with national and regional estimates from the 1986 English house condition survey.

The figures based on local authority returns for April 1989 are as follows:

	Oldham		North West		England
	Total	Percentage of stock	Total	Percentage of stock	Total	Percentage of stock
Unfit dwellings	7,765	8·9	126,100	4·6	571,600	3·0
Dwellings fit but lacking basic amenities	2,837	3·2	57,300	2·1	382,300	2·0
Non-standard dwellings in need of renovation[1]	23,180	26·4	537,000	19·4	3,202,000	16·6

[1] Dwellings requiring repairs estimated at more than £3,000.

Corresponding information for April 1990 is not yet available.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of (a) wheelchair housing starts and (b) wheelchair housing starts and completions for 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and 1990 and the number of planned wheelchair starts for 1991.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The available figures for 1986 to 1989 for England appear in table 6.7 of the annual "Housing and Construction Statistics 1979-1989: Great Britain" and for the first half of 1990 in table 1.5 of part 1 of the June quarter 1990 edition of "Housing and Construction Statistics: Great Britain". Copies of both are in the Library.

The statistics cover wheelchair dwellings provided by local authorities, new towns and housing associations. There are no reliable estimates of the number of such dwellings built privately nor does the Department make forecasts for future periods.

Bradford (Development)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated cost of considering the application by 3D Developments Ltd., for a city grant towards the west end development scheme in Bradford.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 22 October 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on 12 July at column 459.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the position reached in the negotiations between 3D Developments Ltd., and his Department on the application for £40 million city grant towards the west end development in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 22 October 1990]: 3D Ltd's proposals for the west end development scheme are being carefully considered by my officials.

Waste Management

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his Department's library the book "Waste Management" by O. P. Kharbanda and E. A. Stallworthy published by Gowar Publishing Company in January.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The Department's library has this book.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he, or any officials of his Department, were invited to attend or present a paper at the "Waste Management in Europe 1992" conference in Amsterdam held between 10-14 September, organised by the International Solid Wastes and Public Cleansing Association.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 22 October 1990]: Yes. An invitation for an official to give a paper was received but it was not taken up.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider setting up an interdepartmental agency to assess the extent of homelessness and possible solutions to homelessness in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 22 October 1990]: No. The Government's review of the homelessness legislation published last November concluded that local authorities were the appropriate agencies for helping homeless people and assessing their needs, as provided for in the Housing Act 1985.

Combustion Plants (Emissions)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government have submitted a detailed proposal to the EC Commission on how they will achieve their emission reduction targets in accordance with the large combustion plant directive (609/EEC); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: The Government issued a second consultation document on the implementation of the large combustion plants directive on 18 September. The paper included the United Kingdom's draft plan for national emission reductions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen. British officials met informally officials from the European Commission to present and discuss the proposals in the draft plan on 11 October. The Government are currently considering all the responses to the consultation and will submit the final plan to the Commission before the directive's deadline of the end of this year.

English Heritage

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish a table showing the amount of funding given by English Heritage and the Department of the Environment to projects in the last 10 years;

(2) if he will list section 3A payments given by English Heritage since February 1990;

(3) if he will give the current staffing complement of English Heritage;

(4) if he has met the chair of English Heritage to discuss relocation; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will list the amount of money given to English Heritage in each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: The detailed breakdown of expenditure on building repair grants and information on staff complement are matters for English Heritage. I have asked the chairman, Lord Montagu, to write to the hon. Member. Government funding to English Heritage since it was established in 1984 is as follows:

1985-86	52·2
1986-87	60·1
1987-88	65·3
1988-89	66·2
1990-91	78·5

Comparable information in respect of the period from 1979 until English Heritage was established, when the Department of the Environment had responsibility for funding historic buildings, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Secretary of State and myself have met the chairman of English Heritage on a number of occasions and have discussed many issues, including relocation. In line with Government policy, English Heritage has been considering options for relocating its London headquarters staff to the regions. On 17 October, English Heritage commissioners agreed to move the majority of their London-based posts (about 650 administrators and specialists) to Nottingham in 1992-94. This is subject to the acquisition of a suitable building and detailed approval from the Government, particularly on the resources involved.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the percentage unemployment changes in all Lancashire travel-to-work areas as between mid-1987 and the latest available date.

Mr. Jackson: The information is available in the Library. Percentage changes in unemployment between June 1987 and September 1990 for all the travel-to-work areas covering the county of Lancashire were:

Travel to work area	Percentage change[1]
Blackpool	−56·6
Settle	−56·0

Accrington and Rossendale	−42·0
Blackburn	−39·4
Rochdale	−38·2
Liverpool	−34·6

[1] Unadjusted unemployment.

The comparison is affected by seasonal influences as well as by the changes in the coverage of the count that have occurred over the period.

Enterprise Ealing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs are estimated to have resulted from the efforts of Enterprise Ealing; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Enterprise Ealing estimates that it has created approximately 1,200 new jobs since commencing operation in September 1986. Since that date Enterprise Ealing has received a total of £54,000 from my Department under the local enterprise agency grant scheme which has levered a larger amount of private sector sponsorship. I understand that Home Office funds have recently been secured to support the post of an ethnic minority business counsellor to work in Southall and Acton.

Enterprise agencies like Enterprise Ealing can provide a valuable local resource in the changing enterprise support world, especially in co-operation with the training and enterprise councils.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the textile and clothing industries in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Jackson: Changes in the number of employees in the textile and clothing industries are supplied in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Technology

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the latest estimate of the balance of trade in information technology.

Mr. Sainsbury: According to the latest estimates, the United Kingdom had a deficit of £685 million in the manufactured products of the electronics and information technology sector in the first quarter of 1990. This sector is defined as the principal products of activity headings 3301-2, 3441-4 and 3453-4 of the Standard Industrial Classification. These figures are for hardware only. There are no separate figures for trade in software.

Trade Deficit

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet his European counterparts to discuss Britain's trade deficit with the rest of Europe.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend holds regular meetings with his counterparts in the European Community over a broad range of issues.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has any knowledge of the corporate involvement between the Technology Development Group (TDG) of London and the Swiss firm of Schmiedemeccanica of Lugano; and what assessment his Department has made of the role of TDG in exporting sensitive technologies to Iraq.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 October 1990]: My Department is not able to confirm any information about possible links between TDG Ltd. and Schiedemeccanica SA. Exports of goods and technologies as described by the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 (as amended) require export licences. No applications for such licences have been received from TDG Ltd.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has initiated any investigation into the trading operations of the Technology and Development Group, based in London, in regard to its role in the procurement of military usable technology for Iraq.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 October 1990]: Officials in my Department have had discussions with the Technology and Development Group. It is not our practice to disclose the nature of such discussions.

Giant Hogweed

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take steps to ban the import and sale of seeds of Heracleum Mantegazzianum.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 October 1990]: No. There are currently no plans to ban the import or sale of seeds of Heracleum Mantegazzianum.

However, under section 14(2) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, it is an offence for any person to plant or to otherwise cause to grow in the wild any plant which is included in part 2 of schedule 9 to the Act. Giant hogweed (Heracleum Mantegazzianum) is listed in the schedule.

SCOTLAND

Road Planning

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the 16 schemes in Scotland, identified by the National Audit Office as having a negative cost benefit analysis in its report of 27 October 1988 "Department of Transport, Scottish Development Department and Welsh Office: Road Planning" (a) location and name of each individual project, (b) length of road, (c) date of decision to build and date of completion, (d) capital cost, both estimated and outturn, (e) number of vehicles per day estimated, each way, (f) number of vehicles per day from recent census data, (g) the details of the negative economic appraisal or net present value and (h) in respect of the A74 only, estimated capital value cost and NPV for two-lane and three-lane motorway.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the following two tables. Table 1 refers to the 16 schemes identified in the NAO report of 27 October 1988 as having a negative net present value. The originally predicted traffic flows for 1989 were based on the then current national growth projections. Actual traffic growth has generally been higher than predicted at that time.

Table 2 gives the most recent budgetary estimates of costs and net present values for construction of the M74 between Millbank and Gretna.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what penalty points have been awarded by Greater Glasgow health board against private contractors providing domestic, catering, portering and associated services to the board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: One hundred and three penalty points have been awarded against in-house operators; 21 have been awarded against private contractors. These were mainly incurred during the first six months as the new arrangements settled in.

Eye Tests

205. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many eye tests were carried out in the first three quarters of each year since 1983 in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table below.

Year	Scotland	Strathclyde	Glasgow
1983	589,182	284,978	126,559
1984	619,999	298,928	133,091

1987	742,883	359,374	160,490
1988	841,030	404,363	185,376

The total number of sight tests carried out in Scotland from 1 April 1989 is not available centrally.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out in tabular format (a) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the planning, building and maintenance of roads, (b) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the development and maintenance of railways, (c) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the development of public transport other than railways and (d) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the promotion of cycling.

Mr. Rifkind: The roads directorate within the Scottish Development Department has 140 staff and deals with legislation, road safety, traffic regulation orders, road and bridge maintenance and new construction. It has executive responsiblity for the trunk road network in Scotland. The planning, building and maintenance of roads embraces provision for all road users and those employed on this work cannot be categorised by mode.

The responsibilities of transport and local roads division of the Department include the issuing of capital allocations to regional and island authorities who have executive responsibility in Scotland for local roads and transport, and the discharge of the Department's functions relating to other transport modes, principally ferry and bus services. The division has 15½ staff. Thirty-one staff are also employed on toll collection and related duties at the Erskine bridge.

The Department of Transport is the sponsoring Department for British Rail.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of what Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: Under section 5(1) of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967 anyone of any age who claims to have sustained injustice in consequence of maladministration by the Scottish Office may ask a Member of Parliament to refer a grievance to the Parliamentary

Commissioner for Administration. If the complainant is for any reason unable to act for him or herself, the complaint may be made by virtue of section 6(2) of the 1967 Act by another person on behalf of the complainant. The PCA may also investigate complaints against the following bodies, listed in schedule 2 to the Parliamentary and Health Service Commissioners Act 1987, for which I am responsible or to which I make appointments:

Countryside Commission for Scotland
Crofters Commission
Department of the Registers of Scotland
Forestry Commission
General Register Office, Scotland
Highlands and Islands Development Board
Red Deer Commission
Scottish Courts Administration
Scottish Homes
Scottish Legal Aid Board
Scottish Medical Practices Committee
Scottish New Town Development Corporations
Scottish Record Office
Scottish Sports Council
Scottish Tourist Board

Under section 70 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 I have the power to take default action, on complaint by an interested person or otherwise, in respect of the failure of an education authority, school board or school managers to discharge any statutory duty under the 1980 Act.

Persons, including children and young people under 18 years of age or those acting on their behalf, may make complaints or representations about their treatment by the national health service in Scotland in the following ways:

a. by complaining to the appropriate health board about their treatment in hospital (section 1 of the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985);

b. by complaining to the appropriate health board that a family practitioner is in breach of the relevant terms of service (various sections of the NHS (Scotland) Act 1978);

c. by making representation to a tribunal that the continued inclusion of an individual in a list of those providing family practitioner services is prejudicial to those services (section 29 of the NHS (Scotland) Act 1978); and

d. by complaining to the Health Service Commissioner (Section 90 to 97 of the NHS (Scotland) Act 1978), although the Commissioner does not have the powers to investigate actions specified in Schedule 14 to the 1978 Act.

This reply excludes references to procedures in which I have no locus and which are about matters that are the responsibility of local authorities.

Education Authorities (Land Sales)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has compelled education authorities to sell land that was being held for future school building.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Schools (Testing)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he proposes to ensure that testing in English and mathematics is carried out with P4 and P7 pupils in Scotland in 1991.

Mr. Rifkind: Guidelines containing arrangements for the conduct of primary tests in 1991 were issued by the Scottish Education Department on 10 October. A copy has been placed in the Library. To ensure a consistent and orderly approach to testing I have concluded that it would be helpful to place the conduct of testing within a regulatory framework. Accordingly regulations to this effect are being laid before Parliament today.

TRANSPORT

Coventry Airport

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air misses have been filed relating to Coventry airport over the past four years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Two—one on 8 March 1989 and one on 27 June 1989. The first was assessed by the joint air miss working group (JAWG) as a possible risk of collision. The second has still to be evaluated by the JAWG.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change the instructions concerning the investigation of air misses so that complaints notified by members of the public may be so recorded.

Mr. McLoughlin: Reports by members of the public are ocassionally received by the Department and by the CAA. There is no standard procedure for dealing with them; each one is treated on its merits. None of the reports received from the public in recent years has been found on investigation to indicate any hazardous situation. The height of an aircraft can be accurately measured and maintained. The normal separation by height of aircraft at the lower levels is 1,000 feet, about 300 metres. This close vertical, but quite safe, proximity can mislead even an expert observer into believing that the aircraft are dangerously close. There are no plans to change the instructions concerning reports notified by members of the public.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the Civil Aviation Authority on the methods of recording air misses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has had no discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority on the recording of air misses, which are incidents reported only by pilots. However, during 1987 and 1988 discussions between my right hon. Friend and the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority led to the introduction of aircraft proximity hazard (APHAZ) reports by air traffic controllers. The APHAZ reporting system, which began on 1 April 1989, closely parallels that for air misses.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many notifiable accidents were recorded for Coventry airport, and how many of those accidents were attributable to controller error, over the past two years.

Mr. McLoughlin: There have been two notifiable accidents at Coventry airport during the two years. On 23 August 1989 an undercarriage leg of a Cessna 172, a private aircraft, dropped into an unmarked pothole on the taxiway. The aircraft was substantially damaged, but there were no injuries. On 22 November 1989, a Cessna 150, a private aircraft, was blown on to its back during taxiing by the propeller wash of a DC6 that was running up its engines prior to take-off. The Cessna 150 was substantially damaged but there were no injuries.

Three-way Catalyst

251. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will provide in the regulations for the testing or replacement of the three-way catalyst in cars after eight years' use;

(2) if he will make three-way catalyst emission testing one of the conditions for granting an MOT certificate.

Mr. Chope: We are now consulting on proposals for an emissions check for introduction into the MOT test next year. We are proposing that this should include vehicles equipped with catalytic converters. A vehicle with a seriously defective catalyst would not pass the test.

Trams (London)

254. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what considerations he has given to the introduction of modern trams into London.

Mr. Freeman: No formal proposals for the introduction of modern trams in London have been submitted to the Department of Transport. The Department is co-operating in the study of a possible light rail system in the Croydon area which is being taken forward by London Transport in conjunction with British Rail and the London borough of Croydon. The study is considering options, including some street running.

Road Safety

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current budget for road safety campaigning; and what percentage is allocated to responding to inquiries from members of the public.

Mr. Chope: Estimates provision on road safety publicity in 1990-91 is £4·254 million. About 1 per cent. of this is allocated to the provision of a freephone inquiry service in connection with the recent child road safety publicity campaign. Each year several thousand written and telephone inquiries on all aspects of road safety are received by my Department. The cost of responding to these is not separately identified in the Department's provision for running costs.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his announcement on 14 June about the channel tunnel rail link project, what action he has taken to safeguard the route between the channel tunnel terminal and the north downs.

Mr. Freeman: We have made initial safeguarding directions under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 for this section of route (between Cheriton and Upper Halling). The directions came into force on 13 September to coincide with British Rail's launch of public consultations on the fine detail of this route section. We have invited comments from the local authorities concerned on any aspects of the initial directions that should be improved or changed in any revised directions.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no formal procedures specifically available to children and young people who wish to make complaints or representations about matters which are the responsibility of this Department. It is, however, open to members of the public, of whatever age, to write to the Department about any issue which concerns them.

Complaints may also be made, through hon. Members, to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, under section 6 of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, about the administrative actions of Government Departments and certain non-departmental public bodies.

Traffic Lights

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the transport and road research laboratory has made any study of the potential benefit of a traffic light system that allows an approaching bus to activate changes in traffic lights from red to green.

Mr. McLoughlin: The transport and road research laboratory (TRRL) studied bus-activated signals in the United Kingdom in the mid-1970s in both computer simulation and on-street studies. TRRL also participated in international bus priority studies.

At unco-ordinated (non-linked) signals, trials in Swansea showed that average reductions in bus delay of six seconds per bus per signalled junction could be achieved.

In a network of co-ordinated signals in Glasgow, reductions in bus journey times of between 2 per cent. and 15 per cent. were achieved depending on the signalling strategy and the time of day.

Conclusions from the research were that modest net benefits could be achieved. Benefits were less where bus flow was high and where there were conflicting bus movements. Disbenefits to other traffic could outweigh the benefit to buses.

Bus and Cycle Lanes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the mileage of (a) bus lanes and (b) cycle lanes in London.

Mr. Chope: Bus and cycle lanes are primarily for local highway authorities. My Department produces technical guidance to assist with their design.

My Department is planning to develop a network of priority routes which will assist the movement of buses and we are also supporting London Transport's bus priority team. Both initiatives will result in more bus lanes which could also be used by cyclists.

My Department is actively supporting the provision of a 1000-mile cycle network for London. We also consider the provision of cycle lanes and crossings when designing new trunk roads and improvements to existing ones.

Road Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the effects of traffic-calming measures on road accident levels.

Mr. Chope: The final report of the Urban Safety Projects which was published in May (TRRL report RR263) indicated that traffic calming measures can reduce casualties in residential areas by an average of 13 per cent. If this approach were applied nationally approximately 5 per cent. of all casualties would be saved.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road traffic accidents occurred in the Macclesfield constituency in the first six months of 1990; how many of these involved (a) minor injuries, (b) serious injuries and (c) fatal injuries; and what are the comparable figures for the same six-month period in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The figures requested for the constituency of Macclesfield are available only at disproportionate cost. The figures below relate to the borough of Macclesfield and include accidents reported to the police in the first six months of each year. The data for 1990 are provisional.

Road Accidents in the borough of Macclesfield (January-June)

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1990	10	59	311	380
1989	7	75	293	375
1988	7	55	329	391
1987	3	56	277	336

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining the circumstances of each of the road traffic accidents which took place in the Macclesfield constituency during the first six months of 1990 and which led to fatal injuries; and if he will indicate in each case what steps have been taken by the appropriate authorities to minimise future accidents.

Mr. Chope: Information on the detailed circumstances of particular accidents is not held centrally. Investigation of road accidents is the responsibility of the police. Devising appropriate remedial measures is the responsibility of the highway authority. The Department has a continuing programme of engineering measures to improve accident blackspots on trunk roads, as do local highway authorities for their roads. From the next financial year funds from central Government will be made available through transport supplementary grant for engineering remedies on all local roads.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out in tabular format (a) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the planning, building and maintenance of roads, (b) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the development and maintenance of railways, (c) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the development of public transport other than railways and (d) the number of civil servants in his Department devoted to the promotion of cycling.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has the following numbers of civil servants dealing with:

	Numberk
Roads	2,300
Railways	135
Other public transport	20
Cycling	[1]40

[1]Part of the time.

The substantially larger number of roads' staff reflects the Department's direct responsibility for the national roads programme. The development and maintenance of other transport modes is the responsibility of other bodies, for example, British Rail and London Regional Transport.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is considering to avoid repetition of the prolonged traffic delays experienced on the Severn bridge in the first week of October.

Mr. Chope: Delays on the Severn bridge occurred on 5 and 6 October due to a combination of road works, restrictions due to high winds, and traffic incidents.

Resurfacing work will stop in November for the winter months thus easing traffic conditions. This work should be completed next year.

Some windshielding is about to be installed adjacent to and either side of the towers of the existing Severn bridge, where most of the high wind accidents occur. Additionally the proposed second Severn crossing will be windshielded over its entire length.

Tees and Hartlepool Port Authority

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the present members of the Tees and Hartlepool port authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: The present members of the Tees and Hartlepool port authority appointed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport are:

Mr. J. H. Peart (chairman)
Mr. J. W. Cockfield, FICS
Mr. R. M. Stewart, OBE, TD
Mr. C. Godfrey
Mr. C. Ward, MBE
Mr. J. Newbold
Mr. G. D. Saul
Mr. G. Hall
Mr. A. D. Frew
Mrs. B. S. Lythgoe

In addition, two full-time officers of the authority have been appointed by the Tees and Hartlepool port authority to serve as members of the authority. They are Mr. J. P. Hackney and Mr. N. Britton, MBE.

Newcastle Airport (Near-miss)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inquiries have been undertaken into the recent reported near-miss involving a Dan-Air civilian aircraft taking off from Newcastle airport and two military aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: An air miss report was filed with the Civil Aviation Authority concerning a Dan Air B737 and two Tornado aircraft. The incident took place at 8.14 pm on 10 October near Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The 737 was at a height of 12,000 ft en route from Newcastle to Cos in Greece and the Tornados were flying to RAF Leaming, in Yorkshire. Avoiding instructions were given to the Dan Air aircraft by Newcastle airport air traffic control and the Tornados passed above the 737.

The precise details are being investigated by the CAA's safety regulation group. The information will then be sent to the joint air miss working group (JAWG) for assessment. The JAWG comprises representatives from all sectors of the industry, including operators, pilots and air traffic controllers.

MV Derbyshire (Sinking)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold a public inquiry into the sinking of the Derbyshire, following publication of the report of the Royal Institution of Naval Architects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on Tuesday 23 October at column 98.

A595

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a further survey of the pedestrian and vehicle figures for the A595 at Bigrigg, and reconsider the case for a pedestrian crossing.

Mr. Chope: Yes. The Department's agent, Cumbria county council, has been given instructions to carry out a further survey.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the A595 Egremont bypass.

Mr. Chope: The next stage is for the compulsory purchase order to be made.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Freehold

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals for law reform to enable householders to have the same right to purchase the freeholds of their property as exists in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have approved the publication of the final report of the land law working group which makes wide-ranging recommendations on the law of property in Northern Ireland, including recommendations on ground rents and the purchasing of freeholds. It is intended to publish the report before the end of the year, following which there will be a period of public consultation on its recommendations with a view to bringing forward legislation.

Commons Brae, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the condition of the road surface at Commons Brae off Saintfield road in the borough of Castlereagh; and what proposals he has to improve this road surface.

Mr. Needham: The road surface at Commons Brae is in good condition. There are no proposals to improve it at present.

Local Government Finance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the percentage increase in each of the last 10 years and the current year in (a) the regional rate and (b) the local rate in each of the council areas of Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The information is set out in the tables.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Motor Vehicles (Information)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve co-ordination between the police and DVLA on the recording and sharing of information on the ownership, registration and keeping of motor vehicles to combat the resale of stolen vehicles.

Mr. John Patten: We have no such plans. I understand from the police and the DVLA that they regard the existing arrangements for co-ordination as satisfactory.

Telecommunications (Complaints)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been prosecuted under section 49 of the British Telecommunications Act 1981 for each of the years since the Act came into force; and how many of those prosecuted were (a) men and (b) women.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table below. 1989 data are not yet available.

Vagrancy

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) prosecuted and convicted in the Metropolitan and City of London police districts in the year ended December 1989 under the Vagrancy Act 1824 for (i) begging and (ii) sleeping out, (b) prosecuted and convicted in the rest of England and Wales in the same period for the same offences; and how many people at (a) and (b) above (i) were fined, (ii) received custodial sentences, (iii) served custodial sentences in default of payment of fines, (iv) received conditional discharges and (v) received probation orders.

Mr. John Patten: Data for 1989 will not be available until November.

Domestic Violence

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of domestic violence were reported to the police in the last year for which figures are available; and how many resulted in (a) committal proceedings and (b) convictions in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: Information on notifiable offences of violence against the person is published annually in table 2.8 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". The figures for 1989 are published in table 6 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 10/90. Regular information on domestic violence is not reported separately to this Department by the police forces in England and Wales. However, detailed information on homicide is presented in chapter 4 of the above publication. Some incomplete information was published in "Criminal Statistics" in 1979 and 1980. In addition, results obtained from a special survey of violent crime recorded by the police and from the 1988 British Crime Survey were published in Home Office Research Bulletin No. 27. There is also some information in chapter 7 of "Domestic Violence" Home Office Research Study 107. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library. Information on prosecutions and convictions is not collected in sufficient detail to distinguish domestic violence.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individual police forces have dedicated domestic violence units.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not collected centrally, but I understand that dedicated units have been established by three forces to date.

Brixton Prison (Suicides)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides per quarter have taken place in Brixton prison in the last two years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of deaths of inmates at their own hand at Brixton prison in each quarter over the last two years is shown in the table.

Deaths at the prisoner's own hand at Her Majesty's prison Brixton between 1 October 1988 and 30 September 1990

[1] The figures in brackets give the number of deaths in respect of which a verdict of suicide was returned at the inquest.
[2] Includes one death which occurred at Isleworth crown court.
[3] Neither inquest has yet been held.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what child care provision his Department provides for the pre-school age children of Home Office employees or after-school or holiday care for children aged five years or over; and whether he has any plans to increase provision.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office is making day nursery provision available, for payment, for children of its staff in Croydon with effect from 30 October and in Bootle from 5 November. Consideration is being given, with other Government Departments, to making similar provisions in central London. Holiday play scheme places have already been made available for the children of staff in Bootle, Croydon, Peterborough and Westminster.

Police Forces

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) women and (b) men are employed by the individual police forces in Britain; and at what grade they are employed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is responsible for policing in England and Wales where the number of male and female police officers as at 31 August 1990 is as follows:

Police Stations (Rape Suites)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individual police forces have dedicated rape suites.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not collected centrally, but I understand that well over half the forces in England and Wales have now established these suites.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the inquiry by the Devon and Cornwall police into the Birmingham pub bombings case to be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells) on 22 October at columns 19-20.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Waddington: This information is not collated centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. If the right hon. Gentleman is aware of any instance in which a child or young person has been improperly or unlawfully refused a procedure for making a complaint or representation about a matter falling within my responsibility I will look into the matter if he will send me the details.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people had registered to vote by 10 October in the Finchley constituency.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested will not become available until the electoral register is published on or before 15 February 1991.

Ampthill Games

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Bedfordshire on the requirement for citizens of the United Kingdom participating in the Ampthill games on 4 November to divulge their names and addresses to the Bedfordshire police; what information he has on any similar requirement imposed on internationally famous sportsmen when participating in similar games in the United Kingdom; and what is the Government's policy on such requirements.

Mr. Waddington: The police have no power to require those who participate in sporting events to disclose their names and addresses. I understand that the police did not ask for this information in the case to which the hon. Member refers. The information was provided voluntarily by the organisers.

Birmingham Public Inquiry Office

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the staffing by grade at the proposed Birmingham public inquiry office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The most recent estimate indicated a requirement for two executive officers, five administrative officers, one administrative assistant and a custodian.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the likely workload of the proposed Birmingham public inquiry office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It was estimated in 1985 that the proposed Birmingham public inquiry office would attract around 16,000 callers per annum.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the savings at other offices following the opening of the proposed Birmingham public inquiry office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A study in 1985 suggested that there would be a reduction of around 6,500 postal applications per annum at Lunar house, with an approximate net saving at that time of £65,000.

Dogs

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his review of model byelaws for the regulation of dogs in the light of comments received in response to the Department of the Environment consultation document "Action on Dogs".

Mrs. Rumbold: On 10 August 1989 the Department of the Environment published a consultation document, "Action on Dogs", which sought views on various issues including the content and operation of the Home Office model byelaws. Comments were submitted by 126 local authorities and other bodies and these have been carefully considered in the light of our experience in dealing with dog byelaw applications since the models were last reviewed in 1987.

When reaching his conclusions, the aim of the Home Secretary has been to offer a wide range of possible byelaw provisions for dog control which can be used by local authorities in a variety of combinations to produce schemes tailored to meet local needs.

By far the largest number of those commenting suggested making the "poop-scoop" byelaw more freely available. This makes it an offence for a person in charge of a dog to fail to remove any faeces it may deposit in designated parks, recreation grounds and open spaces. At present the byelaw may be applied to any children's playground or sports pitch, beaches and promenades in the summer season, trunk road picnic sites, and picnic areas in country parks, but it may be applied to parks and open spaces only where there are alternative uncontrolled areas. Experience of operating the byelaw has shown that, while it has been successful in designated parks, uncontrolled areas nearby tend to become heavily fouled. We consider that it is reasonable to expect dog owners to clear up after their pets in places used by other members of the public, including children. Therefore my right hon. and learned Friend has decided that he will be prepared to confirm "poop-scoop" byelaws for any park, recreation ground or open space, except heaths and woodlands where the local authority considers them appropriate and without the need to provide alternative uncontrolled areas. The byelaw will also be available for beaches and promenades all the year round. Parts of beaches which are subject to a dog ban during the summer season may be designated as "poop-scoop" areas for the remainder of the year.

We have also considered the byelaws available to control fouling on highways. At present, local authorities may introduce a byelaw which makes it an offence simply to allow a dog to foul a pavement next to a carriageway or an adjacent grass verge up to 4 metres wide. Although most local authorities have this byelaw, it has been criticised on various grounds: it provides no protection either for footpaths which are not adjacent to a highway or for pedestrianised areas and, once the fouling has taken place, the faeces remain there. Since our aim is to encourage dog owners to remove dog mess from the environment, my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to replace the "no fouling" byelaw for pavements with a further extension of the "poop-scoop" byelaw.

In addition to recreation grounds and open spaces, the "poop-scoop" byelaw will be freely available for local authorities to apply to any footpath in a built-up or residential area whether or not it is adjacent to a highway. The byelaw can also be applied to any grass verge which is maintained in good order and is adjacent to a highway. It will also be available for any pedestrianised area owned by a local authority such as a shopping precinct.

My right hon. and learned Friend has also decided to make the "poop-scoop" byelaw available for the gutters of highways in urban areas. While it would be too hazardous to both the pet owner and the traffic to extend the "poop-scoop" byelaw to the carriageway itself, the "no-fouling" byelaw will become available for carriageways in built-up areas. This will prevent the transfer of the problem from the gutter to the carriageway and deter owners from permitting their pets to foul the highway. It will be open to local authorities to choose to use these byelaws for pavement, gutter and carriageways either individually or in combination to meet their local needs.

We have also considered the operation of the "dogs on leads" byelaw. This compels owners to keep their dogs on leads at all times in designated places. It may be applied to parks and other open spaces where a need can be shown —eg ornamental gardens, children's play areas and bowling greens, promenades adjacent to beach ban areas during the summer months, and areas where the disturbance of wildlife is a consideration.

There is a need to balance the interests of those who wish to visit parks without being bothered by loose dogs, such as mothers with young children and pet owners who wish to exercise their dogs off the lead at some time during the day. But the balance is, in general, best determined locally, bearing in mind the need to protect those, such as children, who are likely to be frightened or disturbed by loose dogs. In order to assist local authorities, my right hon. and learned Friend has decided that a wider range of byelaws should be made available to promote greater flexibility.

First, the "dogs on leads" byelaw will be available in a wider range of circumstances than previously permitted, including promenades all the year round, where the local authority is able to justify the use of the byelaw, which will normally involve showing areas are available locally where dogs may be exercised off the lead at some time during the day. Secondly, two new model byelaws will be made available. Instead of imposing a requirement for a dog to be kept on a lead in a park or part of a park all day, it will be possible for a local authority to limit the lead requirement to certain times of day or days of the week, for example when young children are most likely to be there. Different times could be imposed in different parks in the same area to cater for various local needs. A second new byelaw will give powers to council officers to ask for dogs to be put on a lead if it is necessary to prevent nuisance or behaviour giving reasonable grounds for annoyance. This byelaw will be available to local authorities to apply to designated parks and open spaces, again where a need can be demonstrated.

Finally, we have examined the byelaw which prohibits dogs from entering designated and enclosed grounds, enclosed parts of other grounds (children's play areas, bowling greens, etc.) and parts of beaches during the summer season. My right hon. and learned Friend has concluded that these measures should continue to be available on the same basis as before, but that a wider variety of byelaws should be available to the local authority. Two further model byelaws have been developed, first, a byelaw which enables dogs to be banned from a designated park or open space for a specified period of the day. This will be similar to the new time-limited "dogs on leads" byelaw and will be available for open parks as well as enclosed ones. Secondly, we have developed a new model byelaw which will enable local authorities to ban dogs from designated enclosed parks, apart from a specially designated and enclosed exercise area. The exercise area will need to be of a reasonable size and usually be subject to a "poop-scoop" byelaw. Owners will be required to take their dogs on the lead from the park entrance to the exercise area.

When considering which combination of byelaws is most suitable for their areas, local authorities will need to bear in mind that, unlike the general law, the validity of byelaws, including their reasonableness, can be challenged in the courts. Local authorities will need to weigh up the needs of various sections of the community. These will include mothers with children and others who wish to be able to enjoy a visit to the park either free from dogs or free from boisterous loose dogs. There will also be pet owners who wish to exercise their dogs off the lead at least once a day, reasonably near their homes. These will include families with children and dogs who wish to go to the park together, shift workers, the elderly who cannot walk far and solitary women who would wish to choose a time to exercise their dogs when they feel it is safe to do so.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment intends that the same range of byelaws should be available to local housing authorities for public housing estates and amenity greens. The consultation paper "Action on Dogs" also sought comments on the present procedure for local highway authorities to make "dogs on leads" orders under section 27 of the Road Traffic Act 1988, and whether this power should be replaced by a byelaw making power. The balance of comment was in favour of change. The Government have taken note of this and propose to take this forward when a suitable opportunity arises.

My right hon. and learned Friend is grateful to all the bodies that commented on the byelaws and he hopes that the increased range of measures will strengthen the ability of councils to regulate dogs and to deal effectively with the fouling of public areas. Details of this answer, together with the wording of the new model byelaws, will be circulated to local authorities shortly.

European Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Boundary Commission intends to conduct any supplementary review of European parliamentary constituencies in England.

Mr. Waddington: The Commission has informed me that it intends to consider making a supplementary report on the following two European parliamentary constituencies in England:

Oxford and Buckinghamshire
Bedford South.

Jet Skis

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will approve local authority byelaws to enable local authorities to control the use of jet skis.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend will consider any proposal from a local authority which wishes to make byelaws to regulate the use of jet skis, under any enabling power for which he is the confirming authority.

Tear Gas and CS Gas

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to review the legislation governing the storing of supplies of tear gas/CS gas at Territorial Army headquarters in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

Containers of CS gas and similar irritants are stored in accordance with military regulations for ammunition storage. All premises which store these materials are inspected and licensed by the Chief Inspector of Explosives (Army) and hazard assessments are made under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1989.

Orthchloro-benzylidene Melonitrile

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those Territorial Army headquarters in the United Kingdom that are known to stock supplies of orthchloro-benzylidene melonitrile.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

It would not be appropriate, for security reasons, to provide this information.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eastern Europe

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government have plans to offer aid to the newly democratised countries in eastern Europe for the specific purpose of combating pollution and protecting the environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are already doing so through the European Community, and £35 million has already been spent on environmental projects in eastern Europe this year alone. United Kingdom experts have participated in fact-finding missions. We are also prepared to consider carefully targeted support under our know-how funds for eastern Europe.

Kenya

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya concerning the fate of those designated by Amnesty International as prisoners of conscience, including George Anyona, Edward Oyugi, Ngotho Kariuki, Augustus Kathanga and Kanu and Caleb Mokaya Gichana; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made representations on several occasions to the Government of Kenya urging the release of those detainees held without charge. It is our understanding that Messrs Anyona, Oyugi, Kariuki, Kathanga, and Gichana have now been charged in accordance with Kenyan law. The Kenyans are well aware of our concern for the maintenance of good human rights standards.

Argentina

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made any representations to the Argentine Government about abuses of human rights in Trelew, Patagonia, Argentina.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No. We have seen a report of public demonstrations in Patagonia but we have not received any reports of human rights abuses.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about indications given by the United States Government to the Government of Iraq, prior to the invasion of Kuwait by Iraq, concerning the United States Government's likely response to such an eventuality.

Mr. Waldegrave: This is a matter for the United States Government.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Ministers in (a) the Lords and (b) the Commons who have had responsibility for Cambodia since 1980.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since 1980 Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office with responsibility for Cambodia have been:

Peter Blaker MP—1 January 1980—August 1981
Nicholas Ridley MP—until November 1981
Douglas Hurd MP—until August 1982
Cranley Onslow MP—until February 1983
Douglas Hurd MP—until August 1983
Richard Luce MP—until Novembber 1985
Timothy Renton MP—until August 1987
David Mellor MP—until November 1987
Lord Glenarthur—until November 1989
Lord Brabazon—until July 1990
The Earl of Caithness—since July 1990

Antarctica

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his present policy towards ratification of the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities; if he will consider supporting the Australian initiative calling for a new all-embracing environmental convention; annd if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My hon. Friend will have received a copy of my letter which has been sent to all Members and which encloses a copy of our policy paper "Britain in Antarctica". This paper sets out our position on all issues concerning Antarctica including the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities (CRAMRA). The United Kingdom, along with 18 out of 38 member states, has signed CRAMRA, but there is no set timetable for ratification.

We remain committed to the protection of the Antarctic environment and we look forward to discussion of all proposals to that end at the meeting of Antarctic treaty consultative parties in November. Along with a number of other member states, we are proposing an environmental protocol to the existing Antarctic treaty which will provide comprehensive measures for protecting the Antarctic environment and for which we believe there is widespread support.

Palestinians

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a report on the Palestinian doctor found hanged in the occupied territories in the early part of October; and as to what progress there has been towards an autopsy.

Mr. Waldegrave: The consulate-general in Jerusalem is watching this case closely. We understand that an autopsy has been carried out at the request of the family. The preliminary findings from this, suggesting death by suffocation, have been published. But we await a fuller report.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the number of Palestinians he had originally intended to meet during his recent visit to Israel; and how many of them were imprisoned before his visit.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had intended to meet 29 Palestinians for discussions and lunch in Jerusalem on 17 October. Of these, one—Feisal Husseini—was detained by the Israeli authorities before his visit.

Gaza Strip

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the security problem that existed in the area of Gaza strip where he had been scheduled to open a British Council operation at the time at which he had been originally scheduled to carry out the opening.

Mr. Waldegrave: The trial of a Hamas leader from Gaza, Sheikh Ahmed Yassin, was scheduled to begin on 17 October when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had intended to open the new British Council office there. This would have been marked by a general strike and a significant increase in tension in the area. My right hon. Friend therefore decided to delay the opening which was carried out on his behalf by the consul-general in Jerusalem on 24 October.

Israel

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in his recent visit to Israel, he entered into any commitments to the Israeli Government in the event of an Iraqi attack on Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made it clear to the Israelis during his recent visit that such an attack would be absolutely unacceptable.

British Muslims

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet British Muslims recently returned from a visit to the Gulf states.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 22 October]: I will meet Mr. Yusuf Islam shortly.

HEALTH

Cataract Operations

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources can be made available under section 64 of the general scheme for care grants to encourage district health authorities to participate in the schemes organised by the Impact Foundation to reduce waiting lists for cataract operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authorities cannot make applications for core grants under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. These are available only to voluntary organisations.

The Impact Foundation has made an application and we are currently considering this.

Waiting list initiative funds have been, and are being, used by health authorities to support schemes set up by the Impact Foundation to reduce waiting lists and times. So far these schemes have proved to be cost effective and have enabled many patients to be treated from waiting lists.

Mental Illness (Women)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many incidents of women suffering from mental illness are currently recorded with his Department; and, of those, how many have children in care.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are now available locally and nationally, or will soon be available under the Children Act 1989, to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 (as amended) made under sections 29, 36, 39 and 42 of the National Health Service Act 1977 provide for a complaint to be formally investigated if it has been made by or on behalf of any person entitled to family health services and alleges that a family practitioner has failed to comply with the relevant terms of service.

(b) Directions issued to health authorities under section 17 of the NHS Act 1977, and issued following the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985, provide a formal framework for dealing with complaints made about services, care or treatment received in hospital.

(c) Section 120(1)(b) of the Mental Health Act 1983, requires that any complaint made by a detained, or formerly detained, patient should be investigated. This duty is undertaken by the Mental Health Act Commission under section 121(b) of the same Act.

(d) Section 111 of the NHS Act 1977 enables any individual to make a complaint to the Health Service Commissioner with regard to certain failures in service or maladministration by health authorities, family health service authorities, the Mental Health Act Commission and the Public Health Laboratory Service Board.

(e) Section 26 of the Local Government Act 1974 allows complaints of maladministration to be made to the Commissioner for Local Administration in relation to local authority personal social services.

(f) The Department has introduced formal complaints procedures in both its youth treatment centres. Complaints may be made by residents about any aspect of their life in the youth treatment centres.

(g) Section 26(3) of the Children Act 1989, to be implemented in October 1991, requires local authorities to set up procedures to consider representations including complaints about the provision of services to children and families under part III of that Act. Section 59(4) requires voluntary organisations to set up procedures to consider representations including complaints made by children accommodated by them, but not looked after by local authorities, and by other people connected with the child. Paragraph 10(2)(1) of schedule 6 to the Act places a similar requirement on registered children's homes.

The Department does not hold information centrally about national or local procedures for making complaints and representations which fall outside the scope of the legislation mentioned.

Nebulisers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to change the arrangements for issuing nebulisers to national health service patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no such plans. Powered nebulisers will continue to be supplied through the hospital service for those patients for whom they are considered clinically necessary.

ENVIRONMENT

Sheffield Development Corporation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total possible and actual number of attendances of each member at meetings of the board of Sheffield development corporation since their appointment.

Mr. Portillo: Attendance at board meetings is a matter for the board of Sheffield development corporation.

London Docklands Development Corporation

185. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many firms were relocated from the area of the Royal Docks since the inception of the London docklands development corporation and how much money was paid to these firms in compensation for these removals.

Mr. Portillo: The London Docklands development corporation has since 1981 relocated 71 firms previously operating in the Royal Docks area, and £2·13 million has been paid out in compensation for these removals.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Chris Patten: The only formal procedures relating to my Department are those under which the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration may investigate complaints drawn to his attention by hon. Members. The Department does not make any distinction on grounds of age in responding to complaints from members of the public, or from hon. Members on behalf of their constituents.

Education Authorities (Land Sales)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has compelled education authorities to sell land that was being held for future school building.

Mr. Atkins: Directions under section 98 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 are not issued where public sector owners have firm and specific plans to bring land into use for the purposes of their functions within a reasonable period.

Palace of Westminster (Repairs)

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work carried out in the current year to the great clock.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) announced on 22 March at column 683, the hour strike had to be taken out of action to allow essential repair work to be carried out. The chime was restored on 28 August.

The hon. Member will no doubt have noticed that the tone of the chime is lower than it was before the work started. This is mainly because the bearings which are new need time to settle in and new rubber buffers have been installed. However, a check with the archives has confirmed that the tone is identical to a recording made after similar work was carried out in 1956.

Cornish Coast (Wildlife Losses)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dolphins have been found dead in the area around Portreath and Newquay in the past 12 months; and what were the causes of death.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 17 October 1990]: The British Museum (Natural History) holds a comprehensive record of confirmed reports of strandings of cetaceans around the British Coast. Its records for the past 12 months show that 28 cetaceans were found dead around the coasts of Devon and Cornwall. Of these, three were found between St. Ives and Newquay. Comparison with past records shows nothing unusual in these numbers.

Since July, a systematic study of the strandings of cetaceans has been funded by this Department with post-mortems and the taking of samples for contaminant analysis being co-ordinated by a veterinary surgeon based at London Zoo. A post mortem carried out on the only cetacean found in the Portreath/Newquay area since the co-ordinator's appointment has shown no obvious cause of death.

EC Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent action he has taken to extend the collection and publication of statistical data on the environment; and if he will make a statement on the policies of other EC member states on the compilation and release of their environmental statistics.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: A wide range of statistical material is published by my Department, including the annual Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics. In order to bring together environmental statistics in a more coherent and comprehensive form, the Government proposed in their Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" to publish at regular intervals a statistical report covering a range of data on environmental topics. It is hoped that the first report will be published in 1992.

Other EC countries are making similar efforts to improve the collection and dissemination of environmental statistics. All are committed, for example, to support the work of the European Environment Agency, when operational, to ensure that the data underpinning environmental policy are objective, comparable and reliable, at the European level.

Printing (Toxicity)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requirements exist for the treatment of waste water to be undertaken by print workers before discharge to local sewers or natural drainage channels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 23 October 1990]: The treatment required will depend on the terms of the trade effluent consent by the relevant sewerage undertaker or, for natural drainage channels, the terms of the discharge consent by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the risk to print workers posed by the discovery of the radioactive isotopes Caesium 137, Caesium 134 and Cobalt 60 in newsprint imported from Scandinavian countries since April 1986.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 23 October 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

Measurements of Caesium 137 present in paper imported from Scandinavia indicate levels of contamination little higher than those present in any natural material. This would represent only a negligible hazard to print workers handling newsprint.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has no records of measurements for Caesium 134 and Cobalt 60 in newsprint imported from Scandinavia. However, HSE can confidently state that these measurements would be less than that for Caesium 137.

EC Environmental Directives

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on European Community document 8221/90 Env 184 FIN 268 on the implementation of Council regulation (EEC) No. 2242/87 on action by the Community relating to the environment, dated 27 July.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: The document concerned was a report by the European Commission on applications received and funding given during 1989 under the "ACE" Programme (Action by the Community relating to the Environment). An explanatory memorandum to Parliament on the document was submited by the Department of the Environment on 13 September.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to European Commission document 8288/90 ENV 186 COM (90) 287 Final being a proposal for a Council directive harmonising and rationalising reports on the implementation of certain directives relating to the environment, dated 2 August 1990.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: The proposal has not yet come forward for discussion in the Environment Council. We shall be submitting an explanatory memorandum on the proposal to Parliament in the near future.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any of the accountancy firms criticised by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors have been advising on the electricity privatisation.

Mr. Baldry: Further to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 24 April 1990 at column 146, two reports of inspectors appointed under the Companies Act published since that time have contained criticisms of firms of accountants who have been appointed by the Department to advise on electricity privatisation.

Name of company, date of publication of reports and firm of accountants:

Minet Holdings plc and WMD Underwriting Agencies, 29 August, Ernst and Young.

Alexander Howden Holdings plc, 29 August, Ernst and Young/Peat Marwick McLintock and Co. Bermuda.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any of the accountancy firms criticised by the joint disciplinary scheme have been advising on the electricity privatisation.

Mr. Baldry: Two reports, by the committee of inquiry appointed under the joint disciplinary scheme, have contained criticism of firms of accountants who have been appointed as advisers by the Department on electricity privatisation.

Name of Company, date of report and firm of accountants:

Orbit Holdings Limited, 28 March 1983, Peat Marwick Mitchell and Co.

Ramor Investments Limited, 27 January 1986, Price Waterhouse.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what action Her Majesty's Government have taken to implement the steps proposed to urge the European Community to negotiate effective voluntary agreements on minimum standards of energy efficiency for domestic and individual appliances, as set out in paragraph C33, page 2, of annex C of the White Paper on the Environment (Cm 1200);

(2) what studies have been undertaken or commissioned by his Department to substantiate the statement made in the White Paper on the Environment (Cm 1200) C31, page 287, that customers are unlikely to choose white domestic appliances lighting systems, central heating systems etc. on energy saving grounds; and what additional measures are planned by his Department to increase customer awareness of energy labelling on electric goods.

Mr. Baldry: A report by independent consultants on the energy efficiency of domestic electrical appliances, commissioned by the Energy Efficiency Office, was published in September (HMSO Energy Efficiency Series No. 13). The report established the general lack of consumer interest in choosing appliances on the basis of their energy efficiency. The Energy Efficiency Office is now discussing with manufacturers, advertising agencies and consumer groups the best way to present energy information to consumers and has proposed a voluntary labelling scheme for electrical appliances.

The Energy Efficiency Office is actively participating in the EC action programme for improving the efficiency of electricity end use (PACE) and will be discussing information and efficiency standards for domestic electrical appliances at a workshop in Brussels next month. We are also pressing for work on labelling and standards to be carried forward under the proposed specialaction programme for vigorous energy efficiency (SAVE).

Renewable Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out each of the steps taken since May 1979 to publicise the availability of finance for renewable energy from the European Community and the efforts made to encourage British companies to take advantage of such opportunities, to which reference is made in paragraph C.58, page 291, of annex C of the White Paper on the Environment (Cm 1200).

Mr. Moynihan: The Department of Energy has publicised the availability of financial support from the European Community for the research development and demonstration of renewable energy technologies since their programmes began in 1983-84. In 1989, the latest year for which figures are available, 54 United Kingdom companies and universities successfully participated in these programmes with our active encouragement. For the 1991 call for proposals the Department has so far distributed over 30,000 leaflets, mounted nine seminars throughout the United Kingdom, and responded to more than 300 requests for detailed information.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the methods by which Her Majesty's Government intend to reinforce their existing programme for demonstrating renewable technologies; how much additional moneys will be made available per annum to achieve this reinforcement; and what criteria will be adopted by his Department to judge which renewable energy technologies will receive support under the initiative at paragraph C.48, page 290 of annex C of the White Paper on the Environment (Cm. 1200).

Mr. Moynihan: In the light of the White Paper on the Environment my Department's renewable energy strategy, as published in Energy Paper 55, is to be reviewed and updated during 1991. Methods, resources and criteria for support will be addressed in that comprehensive review.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the establishment of the new ministerial committee on energy efficiency foreshadowed in paragraph 5-32, page 70 of the White Paper on the Environment (Cm. 1200).

Mr. Wakeham: The ministerial committee on energy efficiency aims to raise the profile of energy efficiency by working with Government Departments, local authorities and organisations representing energy users in all sectors of the economy to stimulate improvements.

The first meeting of the committee was held on 17 October. I asked my colleagues to: develop initiatives to raise awareness of the potential for energy saving and to draw attention to the energy efficiency measures that can be taken and the Government services to promote them; to intensify the campaign to improve energy efficiency on the Government estate; and to report on how they and their Departments will take forward the initiatives announced in the White Paper on the Environment.

The first annual report of the campaign to promote energy efficiency on the Government estate was also published on 17 October. Copies of the report are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the specific services he expects the Energy Efficiency Office will develop in 1991 to provide energy users with expert advice, specific to circumstances, on the purchase, design and improvement of energy using equipment and buildings, as foreshadowed in paragraph C11, page 285 of annex C of the White Paper on the Environment (Cm. 1200).

Mr. Baldry: Implementation of energy efficiency investments often involves the selection and purchase of complex equipment and alterations to the structures of buildings and to the heating, lighting and ventilation equipment, or modification of industrial processes. These purchases, alterations or modifications require engineering and costing expertise often lacking in smaller companies.

My officials have begun work on a scheme to assist with this project management of energy efficiency investments.

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of industrial serious occurrences and lost time incidents in the east Shetland basin for each month in the current year up to and including September.

Mr. Moynihan: Provisional figures for accidents on or near to offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf reported to my Department in the current year to September are as follows:

	Fatalities	Serious accidents	Dangerous occurrences
January	—	6	37
February	—	8	32
March	1	6	39
April	—	6	38
May	—	5	30
June	—	5	26
July	[1]7	5	36
August	1	5	32
September	1	6	33

[1] Includes six fatalities resulting from the helicopter crash on the Brent Spar.

Separate figures for the east Shetland basin could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Figures in respect of disablement from work for three days or more are not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as possible.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many visits his Department's safety inspectors made to offshore installations in August and September; how much notice they gave in each case; and how long each visit lasted;

(2) what is the policy of his Department's safety inspectors as regards giving notice to the operators of offshore oil and gas installations before visiting; and what information he has on Norwegian practice.

Mr. Moynihan: Twelve offshore inspections were undertaken in August 1990 and six in September 1990. My Department does not maintain records of the precise duration of each inspection.

The Offshore Installations (Inspectors and Casualties) Regulations 1973 require inspectors to give offshore operators reasonable notice of their need for conveyance offshore for the purpose of carrying out an inspection. In practice approximately four days' notice are normally given. Inspectors also have the discretion to undertake surprise visits where virtually no advance notice is given and they do this from time to time.

I understand that Norwegian practice is similar.

PRIME MINISTER

Q13. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Miniser if she will make a statement on the interdepartmental progress being made in terms of United Kingdom preparations for the preliminary conference and the twin inter-governmental conference meetings starting in December in Rome.

The Prime Minister: Interdepartmental preparations for both intergovernmental conferences continue in the usual way.

Electronics Industry

Q32. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she treats the international electronics industry as an appropriate area for special ministerial co-ordination.

The Prime Minister: The Government are primarily concerned with creating the right climate in which all British business can prosper. We see no need for special ministerial co-ordination of the electronics industry.

Official Visits

Q33. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a national health service hospital.

The Prime Minister: I visit a number of hospitals during the course of each year. I have at present no plans for further visits.

Engagements

Mr. Watson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 October.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Women's Issues

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will state the terms of reference, the current membership, and the criteria for membership for the ministerial group on women's issues; and if she will indicate the issues that this group has recently dealt with.

The Prime Minister: The ministerial group was established in 1986 to provide a co-ordinated examination of policy issues of special concern to women, and with a particular duty to consider the Government's response to the forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women (adopted during the United Nations decade for women).

The group is chaired by the Home Office Minister of State with special responsibility for equal opportunities, my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold). The vice-chairman is the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard), who is also co-chairman of the Women's National Commission. Other members attend on the basis of their departmental responsibilities for matters within the remit of the group.

The group has recently:

—reviewed the Government's policy in areas covered by the forward looking strategies;

—issued guidance designed to ensure that civil servants recognise the equal opportunities implications of policy proposals;

—taken steps to increase the number of women appointed to public bodies;

—drawn up two 5-point plans to improve the range and quality of child care options;

—developed a package of initiatives aimed at tackling domestic violence;

—among the issues the group are now discussing the problems faced by those caring for elderly or disabled relatives.

Children and Young People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister which cabinet committees have responsibilities which include policy and/or co-ordination of policy on matters relating to children and young people under 18 years.

The Prime Minister: Policy issues requiring co-ordination are the subject of collective discussion by Ministers as appropriate.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will update the answer of 29 July 1988 she gave to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor), Official Report, column 629, on the responsibility of different Government Departments for matters relating to children and young people under 18 years.

The Prime Minister: Current departmental responsibilities in England are as follows:

Department of Education and Science

Promotion of education, including primary, secondary and further education and the youth service; school curriculum and assessment policy and public examinations.

Department of Employment

Responsibility for training, employment and vocational education initiatives for young people, such as YT, training credits, TVEI, inner city compacts and other educational programmes.

Central responsibility for the careers service in England delivered by the local education authorities.

Department of Environment

Out of school sporting activities for children and young people.

Grants under the Urban Programme for projects benefiting children.

Department of Health

Health services for children and young people in hospital and in the community, including child health surveillance and dental and school health services.

Policy for social services for children, prevention of child abuse, adoption, regulation of day care services for under fives (including inspection of facilities).
Nutrition including infant feeding.
Care and protection of children.
Social services for socially deprived families and children in care.
Care, control and treatment of juvenile delinquents.

Home Office
Criminal justice policies.
Arrangements for offenders given custodial sentences.
Magistrate's court proceedings involving the custody and maintenance of children.

Lord Chancellor's Department
Family law relating to children.

Department of Social Security
Policy on social security benefits affecting children and young people, including benefits for disabled people, unemployment benefits, family credit, child benefit, and one-parent benefit, the social fund, state and occupational pensions, income support and housing benefits.
(payments of benefits is undertaken by the Department and by local authorities. Payment of unemployment benefits is undertaken by the Department of Employment on an agency basis).

In Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, some of the functions are carried out by the Departments listed; others or their equivalents are, subject to appropriate legislation, performed by the Welsh, Scottish and Northern Ireland Offices.

Further breakdown by departmental divisions would be possible only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Prime Minister what formal arrangements exist for co-ordinating policy among the Departments involved on matters relating to children and young people under 18 years of age.

The Prime Minister: There are official interdepartmental co-ordinating committees concerning children and young people on juvenile delinquency, child abuse and services for pre-school children. Issues concerning children arise at other interdepartmental committees.

There is an interdepartmental group on Women's issues whose discussions involve a variety of subjects of particular interest to women. These discussions have also included various aspects of child care.

Visits (Cost)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish (a) the total cost of her visit to Wales on 26 September and (b) the total cost of her visit to the Brecon and Radnor constituency that was paid for by the public purse.

The Prime Minister: The costs of visits of this nature are not readily identifiable.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Housing Possession

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what is his policy on the use of duty solicitors in housing possession cases.

The Attorney-General: We have no proposals to extend the duty solicitor scheme to cover housing possession cases.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what was the expenditure in the last financial year of legal aid and advice for criminal cases in the courts and on duty solicitor schemes for police stations and at courts; and what was the comparable expenditure immediately before the operation of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act.

The Attorney-General: The access to legal advice provisions as laid out in section 58 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 were implemented on 1 January 1986. The financial year 1984-85 has therefore been used for the purpose of comparison with 1989-90. The table shows gross expenditure during the two years:

	1989-90 £ million	1984-85 £ million
Criminal Legal Aid:
Magistrates' Courts	151·478	68·056
Higher Courts	134·956	68·039
Duty Solicitor Schemes:
Magistrates' Courts	6·522	0·537
Police Stations	30·969	—
	323·925	136·632

County Courts

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to improve county court procedures to accelerate hearings.

The Attorney-General: On 6 April 1989 the Lord Chancellor announced the Government's acceptance of the civil justice review body's proposals and his strategy for implementing them. The proposals, which are to be implemented over a period of five years, include a wide range of measures to improve the handling of cases and speed up their progress to trial or hearing. A number have already been introduced administratively and by rule changes in June and October this year.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average length of time it takes to obtain a county court hearing and judgment; and if he will list his answer in tabular form by courts.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the time between a request being received for hearing and the next available date for trial is monitored on a monthly basis. Table A shows the average waiting time measured on this basis, for the county courts and the High Court. Table B shows the figures for county court trial centres at 31 May 1990 and 30 September 1990. Trial centres provide continuous hearings and it can be taken that judgment follows very shortly after the conclusion of the trial. Actual waiting time in particular cases varies according to the circumstances of a particular case, including such factors as the availability of key witnesses or the appearance of new evidence.

County Court and High Court Waiting Times

Average 11 weeks (ranging from 4-26 weeks depending on sitting pattern).
2. High Court
15 weeks.

3. Queen's Bench general list in London

County Court Bailiffs

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to remunerate county court bailiffs by commission.

The Attorney-General: County court bailiffs are salaried members of the Lord Chancellor's Department. There are no plans to remunerate them by commission.

Judgment Debts

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to re-establish the practice where a judgment debt was required to be paid into the court and not to the plaintiff.

The Attorney-General: There are no plans to re-establish the practice where a judgment debt was required to be paid into court and not to the plaintiff. The present arrangements introduced in April 1990 have led to significant savings in court staff time and brought advantages to court users through a wider spread of payment methods and places to pay.

Debt Enforcement

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received about county courts regarding debt enforcement.

The Attorney-General: The largest number of representations was received in response to the civil justice review body's consultation paper on the enforcement of debt. A total of 120 responses were received.

The consensus of those responses was that the nature and value of business conducted by High Court sheriffs and county court bailiffs were significantly different and that these two separate functions should be maintained. The enforcement area identified as being most in need of reform was the administration order procedure.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of the Lord Chancellor's Department.

The Attorney-General: A formal, non-statutory procedure exists whereby all complaints made, including those made by or on behalf of children, to the Lord Chancellor are fully considered and investigated by the Lord Chancellor's Department.

In addition, a provision in the Courts and Legal Services Bill will extend the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to the administrative functions of court and tribunal staff appointed by the Lord Chancellor, except in relation to acts undertaken at the direction or on the authority of a person acting in a judicial capacity.

National Union of Mineworkers

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Serious Fraud Office will conduct a thorough investigation into the national and international affairs of the National Union of Mineworkers in the light of the conclusions of the Lightman inquiry.

The Solicitor-General: The Metropolitan police fraud squad is conducting a number of inquiries and will consider whether there is a case for investigation by the Serious Fraud Office. It has not yet completed those inquiries.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Eggar: Provision is made in sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944, as extended by section 219 of the Education Reform Act 1988, for complaints to be made to the Secretary of State about the conduct of local education authorities and the governing bodies of maintained schools (including grant-maintained schools), higher education corporations and certain institutions of further or higher education maintained or assisted by local education authorities, in the exercise of their functions under the Education Acts. Where the complaint relates to the curriculum or religious worship the complaint must first be made at local level, under arrangements made by the local education authority pursuant to section 23 of the Education Reform Act. None of these provisions imposes any formal restriction on the age of the complainant.

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of scientists employed at each of the Agricultural and Food Research Council institutes since 1980, including those expected to be employed in 1991 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Agricultural and Food Research Council-funded institutes were restructured during the period 1985 to 1987. For ease of reference, the figures for science group staff in post are shown on the basis of the present institutes of research.

The figures for actual numbers employed at 1 April in the relevant years to 1990 and estimates for 1991 are shown in the table. The number of staff employed in 1992 will depend on a number of factors including the funding available to the council through the science budget and the extent of commissions from the Ministry of Agriculture and other externally funded research. The present estimate is that the total number of scientific staff will be about 1,960, including Agricultural and Food Research Council staff employed in the British Society for Horticultural Research (BSHR).

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to enable primary schools to close for an extra day in order to allow training to take place for national curriculum assessments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I asked local education authorities in 1989 to set aside two or three of this school year's existing school closure days for training to prepare teachers who will undertake the first national assessments of seven-year-olds in 1991. As a result, most local education authorities have already developed coherent plans for such training. I am encouraged by the commitment and professionalism of primary school teachers as they prepare for the implementation of the national curriculum assessment arrangements.

However, not all LEAs are equally well-prepared. In response to representations, particularly from the NAHT, and in order to ensure the success of training arrangements in all local education authorities, I therefore intend shortly to make regulations to permit primary schools, if they wish to do so, to close for one extra day in the spring term of 1991 for the purpose of training teachers in the assessment of seven-year-olds and the development of school policies for reporting the results to parents.

I stress that this is an exceptional step. It responds to the unique challenge facing primary schools who have never before been involved in comprehensive national assessments. I also wish to emphasise that this is solely to make the option of an extra closure day available to those local education authorities for whom it will be helpful. It is not obligatory. Many local education authorities and schools with already settled training plans may see no need to exercise the option and will be under no compulsion to do so. The availability of an extra day in the spring term will provide those schools that need it with useful additional flexibility to exploit effectively the training materials shortly to be issued by the School Examinations and Assessment Council and to promote the development of effective school arrangements for reporting the results of assessments to parents.

EMPLOYMENT

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Jackson: Under the legislation and programmes for which my Department is responsible any formal procedures for making complaints and representations which exist are open on the same basis to those under 18 as to those over 18.

In the case of those programmes aimed mainly at those under 18: Youth Training (YT); a contractual requirement is placed on YT providers to ensure that non-employed trainees have access to clear written grievance procedures, including the right to make representations to the Department or to the careers service. Where training and enterprise councils (TECs) have been established contractual requirement is placed upon TECs to ensure that YT providers make similar arrangements for non-employed trainees, including the right to make representations to the TEC or to the careers service.

Careers Service and the Department's Vocational Education Programmes such as TVEI: local education authorities operate these programmes in their area. I would expect issues about provision in a particular area to be raised with the relevant authority in the first instance. No formal procedures exist for making representations to my Department in these cases, although we will naturally consider any representations that are made to us, whether by those under or over 18.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what percentage of total Government expenditure on child benefit goes to families with incomes below the mean, on an equivalent income basis;

(2) what percentage of families receiving child benefit have income levels below the mean, on an equivalent income basis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The proportion of families receiving child benefit with household incomes below the mean of equivalised income before housing costs has changed little since 1979 and remains in the region of 70 per cent. About 74 per cent. of total Government spending on child benefit went to these families.

National Insurance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what increases in national insurance contributions have been imposed specifically on sub-postmasters since 1987; for what purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No increases in national insurance contributions have been imposed specifically on sub-postmasters since 1987. The treatment of their earnings for national insurance contribution purposes and the rates at which their national insurance contributions are paid are identical to those of other workers in similar circumstances.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the implications for British pensioners of the Barber decision of the European Court of Justice.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The European Court of Justice ruled on 17 May 1990, in the case of Barber v. Guardian Royal Exchange, that benefits from occupational pension schemes are pay for the purposes of article 119 of the treaty of Rome. This means that occupational pension schemes must treat men and women equally. Schemes need to take legal advice as to how the terms of the judgment apply to their particular circumstances.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to change the total funding of, and categories of, people eligible to claim from the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: The decision to restrict eligibility to those aged between 16 and 74 and who also receive attendance allowance at the higher rate was taken by the trustees in the light of the resources made available for this financial year. I understand that they are keeping this decision under review.

Computerisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the Government's estimate of the profit-cost of the social security computerisation programme made in each of the past eight years and his latest estimate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available estimate of the cost of the social security computerisation programme is in the order of £1,800 million up to the end of March 1999. The computerisation programme is helping to produce savings in administration costs which are expected to amount to around £150 milion per annum by 1995. Earlier estimates of the profit-cost of the programme were examined by the Committee of Public Accounts in its 24th report (HC179) following the Comptroller and Auditor General's report (HC111). I refer the hon. Member to these reports.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the Government's estimates of job losses that would result from the computerisation of the social security system made in each of the past eight years and his latest estimate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: When the operational strategy project was announced in 1982, very early estimates of the reduction in manpower amounted to approximately 25,000 posts.

In 1988 a more detailed analysis was undertaken to reflect changes to workloads and future system functionality.

The latest estimte of the number of posts to be lost is 21,000, as published in the 1989 annual review of the operational strategy.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In general, only persons aged 16 or over are entitled to social security benefits in their own right. All such persons have the same rights of making complaints or representations irrespective of age. Where children are entitled to benefit any rights of redress will be exercised by the person claiming on their behalf.

Claims for social security benefits are decided by independent adjudication officers (section 98 of the Social Security Act 1975). Claimants unhappy with benefit decisions can ask for a review of that decision (section 104) or appeal to an independent tribunal under the presidential system (sections 100 and 109). There is a further right of appeal, on a point of law, from the tribunal decision to the social security commissioner (sections 101 and 112) and from the commissioner's decision to an appropriate court (section 114).

Entitlement to income support is restricted to persons over 18 and to those of ages 16 and 17 who are not required to be available for employment including lone parents, blind and disabled persons and pregnant women. A 16 or 17-year-old who is required to be available may also be entitled where it appears to the Secretary of State that severe hardship will result unless income support is paid. Decisions on the severe hardship question are made centrally at the severe hardship cases unit in Glasgow and can be reviewed and possibly revoked following representation.

The attendance allowance board determines medical questions arising from claims to attendance allowance (section 105) and a dissatisfied claimant can seek a review of the board's decision (section 106). There is then a right of appeal on a point of law against any review decision to the social security commissioner.

Certain questions, mainly concerned with contribution matters, are decided by the Secretary of State. Claimants can seek a review of such decisions or appeal on a point of law to the appropriate court (section 94).

The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration can investigate complaints of maladministration but has no power to challenge decisions of the independent adjudication authorities (PCA Act 1967).

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether sums of money paid by an employer to a person receiving invalidity benefit in respect of the cost of travelling to work are treated as earnings for the purposes of the therapeutic earnings rule; and whether the actual travelling costs are deductible.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The amount paid by an employer to reimburse a person for the cost of travelling to and from work is not taken into account as earnings in considering the application of the therapeutic earnings rule. Where the employee pays his own travelling costs these are generally deducted in full from his earnings before the therapeutic earnings test is applied.

Mrs. M. Pilgrim

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make inquiries into the delay in arriving at a decision on the application for night rate attendance allowance in respect of Mrs. M. M. Pilgrim of 25 St. Augustone's avenue, Southend, reference ZX252490D; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There was no delay in arriving at a decision on the application for night rate attendance allowance. There was delay in making payment while inquiries were made into the status of the two nursing homes involved. I can confirm that all arrears due to Mrs. Pilgrim were paid on 11 October.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the amount lost per week and per year which (i) a single pensioner and (ii) a married couple would have received over and above the price-indexed pension increase each year since 1979 if the earlier formula had been maintained of increasing pensions each year in line with either prices or earnings whichever was higher; and if he will set out these sums both on a weekly and annual basis for each year since 1979 at (a) current prices and (b) 1990 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 October 1990]: Similar figures for pension rates were given in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 15 October at col. 741, together with an estimate of the increased national insurance contribution rates—£7·50 a week in respect of an employee on average earnings, including the employer's contribution—which would be entailed in meeting the additional cost in the present year.

It would be inappropriate to make the further calculations requested, since they would rest on the wholly unrealistic assumption that additional expenditure on the scale implied would have taken place without economic and financial effects, including higher rates of inflation and taxation than have in fact occurred, with seriously adverse consequences for pensioners themselves.

Social Security Commissioner

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many appeals to the social security commissioner were lodged during the last year for which statistics are available concerning mobility allowance; what proportion of all claims for mobility allowance in that year they represented; and how many such appeals resulted either in the case being remitted for reconsideration by the medical appeal tribunal or in the commissioner substituting his or her own decision for that of the medical appeal tribunal;

(2) how many appeals to the social security commissioner were lodged in the last year for which statistics are available concerning attendance allowance; what proportion of all attendance allowance claims in that year they represented; and how many such appeals resulted in the case being remitted to the attendance allowance board for reconsideration.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is given in the table. No figures are available for the number of cases remitted to medical appeal tribunals. Commissioners are not empowered to substitute their decisions for those given on medical questions by medical appeal tribunals.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the atomic weapons establishment is suffering from any difficulties of recruiting enough graduate scientists in any or all areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The science group as a whole at AWE continues to experience difficulties with the recruitment of graduate scientists. The position has not changed significantly over the past year.

SRAM-T Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to deploy SRAM-T missiles in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The London declaration, following the NATO summit meeting here in May, made clear the alliance's continuing requirement for nuclear forces, based in Europe and kept up to date where necessary. However, the question of the detailed deployment of United States SRAM-T missiles has not yet arisen.

Radar

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States Congress has removed from the 1990-91 budget United States financing of the joint United States/United Kingdom over-the-horizon radar proposed for the former St. David's airfield, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: We understand that, as part of congressional scrutiny of United States Government spending proposals for fiscal year 1991, the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee has requested the United States Government to re-examine the requirement to locate this system in the United Kingdom. The reponse to this request is a matter for the United States Government.

Thai Army

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of his Department were attached to the Thai army, and for what purpose, for each year from 1985, inclusive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 22 October at column 90.

Diving Clearance Service

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of the Royal Navy specialised diving clearance service based in Portsmouth.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In the light of my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 25 July on "Options for Change", the future of the whole of the naval estate and support services, including diving services, is under consideration.

Any announcements of changes will be made when our examination is finished.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what stage his Department assessed that the risk of attack against Saudi Arabia had become sufficiently grave to justify the dispatch of an armoured brigade for the defence of that country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The initial military need in response to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait was to strengthen quickly the defences of the Gulf states and to enforce the United Nations embargo. To achieve this the United Kingdom, together with the United States and other countries, sent air and naval forces at the request of countries in the region. Substantial Iraqi forces, including large concentrations of armour, still occupy Kuwait. The deployment of 7 Armoured Brigade is to help counter the continued threat to the Gulf states from these forces.

WALES

Rents into Mortgages Scheme

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of his flexi-ownership—rents into mortgages—scheme.

Mr. Grist: We are extremely encouraged by the progress made by the Development Board for Rural Wales in the first 10 months of operating the experimental flexi-ownership scheme. Seventeen per cent. of the eligible tenants have expressed an interest and almost 60 (7 per cent.) have applied to become flexi-owners. Ten sales have been completed and the board estimates that about 5 per cent. of the eligible stock will have been sold by the end of the first year. We are currently considering whether the scheme should be extended.

Local Authorities (Car Usage)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money was allocated by each district council and county council in Wales for (a) the purchase of cars and (b) car allowance schemes for chairpersons and chief executives during 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not available centrally.

Farmers' Incomes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the income of farmers in Wales accrued from non-farming sources for each of the past 10 years for which records are available.

Mr. David Hunt: Based on the Inland Revenue survey of personal incomes, details of which are only readily available for the years 1983-84 to 1986-87, the percentage of the income of farmers in Wales which accrued from non-farming sources for each of the four years was as follows:

Year	Percentage of income from non-farming sources
1983-84	42
1984-85	41

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the average income of farmers in Wales in each of the past eight years for which records are available, expressed as a percentage of each year's average manual worker's earnings in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Informattion on Welsh farmers' incomes is based on the results of the Inland Revenue survey of personal incomes and relates to incomes assessed for tax of individuals registered as having a self-employed income from agriculture and horticulture as their main or principal other source of self-employment income. Separate figures for Wales are not readily available prior to 1983-84, and the latest results of the survey are for the year 1986-87.

The average earnings of manual workers in Wales are derived from the Department of Employment new earnings survey.

The two series are not strictly comparable, there being conceptual differences in the way income and earnings are calculated.

Average income of Welsh farmers assessed for tax	£7,939	£7,739	£9,110	£11,002
Average manual workers earnings in Wales	£7,090	£7,548	£7,990	£8,510
Average income of Welsh farrmers assessed for tax expressed as a perscentage of available manual workers' earnings in Wales	112 per cent.	102 per cent.	114 per cent.	129 per cent.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State has statutory responsibility for the construction and maintenance of motorway and trunk roads in Wales. The Welsh Office highways directorate which carries out these functions has a staff complement of 172·5. With minor exceptions statutory responsibility for matters relating to public transport rests with the Secretary of State for Transport. The Welsh Office transport policy division, which has oversight of all transport-related issues affecting Wales, including public transport and cycling, has a staff complement of 20.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. David Hunt: The following formal procedures provide for complaints to be made by children and young people or their representatives:

Section 26(3) of the Children Act 1989, which comes into force in October 1991, provides that any complaint or representation about the provision of services to children and their families under part III of the Act should be considered through local authorities' procedures. Section 59(4) requires voluntary organisations to set up similar procedures to consider representations including complaints made by children accommodated by them but not looked after by local authorities, and by other people connected with the child. Paragraph 10(2)(b) of schedule 6 to the Act places a similar requirement on registered children's homes.

Any person who is or has been a patient at a hospital or a person acting on behalf of any such patient is eligible to make a complaint about the care and treatment received, under the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985. If not satisfied there is the right to make representations to the Health Service Commissioner to investigate a complaint, under section III of the National Health Services Act 1977. There is no age constraint.

The National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 (as amended) made under sections 26, 36, 39 and 42 of the National Health Service Act 1977 provide for a complaint to be formally investigated if it has been made by or on behalf of any person entitled to family health services and alleges that a family practitioner has failed to comply with the relevant terms of service.

Section 120 of the Mental Health Act 1983 provides for the investigation of any complaint by a detained or formerly detained patient, of whatever age. By virtue of section 121 of the Act, such investigation would be carried out by the Mental Health Act Commission.

There is nothing to prevent a child or young person from using the provisions of sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944, as extended by section 219 of the Education Reform Act 1988, providing for complaints to be made to the Secretary of State about the conduct of local education authorities and the governing bodies of maintained schools (including grant-maintained schools), higher education corporations and certain institutions of further or higher education maintained or assisted by local education authorities, in the exercise of their functions under the Education Acts. Where the complaint relates to the curriculum or religious worship the complaint must first be made at local level under arrangements made by the local education authority pursuant to section 23 of the Education Reform Act.

British Urban Development

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, in view of the cancellation of some of British Urban Development's projects, together with the imminent departure of the deputy chairman, he has sought a definite date to discuss the future of the proposed project in Swansea.

Mr. David Hunt: As the right hon. Gentleman is aware, I have issued an open invitation to British Urban Development to discuss developments on the Tawe Vale project. That invitation remains open.

School Psychological Services

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has anything to add to his reply to the right hon. Member for Swansea, West on 18 October, Official Report, column 870, in respect of figures published in the report by Her Majesty's inspectors on a survey of school psychological services in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are no current statistics available on the number of educational psychologists in post in Wales, but local education authorities have been asked for details.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will consult representatives of local government and relevant professional bodies on his proposals for housing revenue account subsidy in 1991-92; and what proposals he will be making.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office is today consulting local authorities, the Council of Welsh Districts and other interested bodies on proposals for determining each authority's entitlement to subsidy for 1991-92. The proposals include some important technical changes to the rules for calculating subsidy entitlement. Comments on the bulk of the proposals are invited within six weeks. I shall be placing a copy of the consultation papers in the Library together with a list of the guidelines and allowances for each authority.

For rent guidelines, we propose an average rent increase of just 2 per cent. above the allowance for inflation. This means an average increase per week of £1·87 ranging from £1·41 to £2·50 over the guideline rent which applied this year. This will continue the process introduced last year or encouraging authorities towards charging sensible levels of rents which better reflect the value of property in different parts of the country while remaining within the reach of ordinary tenants.

For management and maintenance allowances, we propose to introduce a system of targeted allowances which will better reflect the condition of each authority's stock. This will be of particular benefit to a number of authorities while no authority will have an allowance lower in cash terms than for the current year. Across Wales overall, the average increase in allowances will maintain them at this year's level in real terms.

The rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances are no more than the assumptions the Government will make in calculating each authority's entitlement to subsidy. It is for each council to set its own rents and to decide how much to spend on managing and maintaining its stock within its obligations under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Changes are also proposed which affect authorities' subsidy entitlement in respect of properties held on leasehold terms. The aggregate cost of leases acquired after midnight tonight will have to be met within annual limits. Authorities can continue to use short-term leasing in appropriate circumstances subject to the plans being agreed with the Department. This is in addition to a change proposed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security which was announced earlier this week and deals with an anomaly in the present subsidy rules.

36. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what study he has made of the applicability of the input-output analysis techniques initiated by Professor Wassily Leontief and developed by the Japanese Government to be used by the European Community.

Mr. Maples: Input-output tables for the United Kingdom are produced by the Central Statistical Office. The latest published set relates to 1984.

Productivity

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the productivity improvements in British industry since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Manufacturing industry's productivity grew by an average of 4·2 per cent. a year between 1979 and 1989; faster than in all other major industrialised countries. In the sixties and seventies the United Kingdom was at the bottom of the manufacturing productivity league table.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage further manufacturing productivity growth.

Mr. Neale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage manufacturing productivity growth.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This Government will continue to implement economic policies designed to encourage enterprise and efficiency and thus to promote manufacturing productivity growth. The proof of these policies' success has been the marked improvement in manufacturing productivity growth over the last decade. 69. Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress during recent discussions on his proposals for a European currency unit.

Mr. Major: Since I set out our proposals for a hard ecu on 20 June, I have met my fellow Finance Ministers a number of times to promote the United Kingdom approach to progress beyond stage 1. A consensus is emerging that, as I have argued, more convergence in economic performance is needed before moving beyond stage 1; and there is growing support for our view that objective criteria are needed to determine when sufficient convergence has been achieved.

I will continue to argue forcefully for the United Kingdom approach in the run-up to the intergovernmental conference.

Trade Deficit

42. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his estimate of the trade deficit for 1990; and what are the comparable volume and real terms figures for 10 years earlier.

51. Mr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to encourage a higher level of investment by manufacturing industry.

70. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax was paid by charities in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Manufacturing exports have grown on average by 7·1 per cent. per year since 1983. In 1989 they rose by 10·5 per cent.—the fastest growth in any year since 1973. Supply side reforms have transformed industry's ability to compete on world markets, and allowed manufacturers to maintain their share of world trade after decades of decline.

64. Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received any recent representations about the role of investment trusts in the savings market.

Mr. Maude: I have received a representation from the Association of Investment Trust Companies on this subject.

Gross Domestic Product

79. Mr. Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the growth in gross domestic product of European Community countries during the 1980s.

Mr. Maples: Since 1980 of the EC countries has grown at an average annual rate of 2·2 per cent. Over the same period United Kingdom gross domestic product growth averaged 2·7 per cent. a year.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the rates of growth of the gross domestic product of the United Kingdom, France, Italy and West Germany in the 1960's, 1970's and 1980's, respectively.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Data for the gross domestic product of France, Italy and West Germany are published by the OECD in "National Accounts 1960-88" and in "Main Economic Indicators". Data for United Kingdom gross domestic product are published in the CSO "Blue Book".

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for the period since 1979, Department by Department, the number of civil servants relocated from the south-east, the number planning to be relocated and for which locations have already been chosen and over what time scale, and the numbers of which will be relocated and for which no location has yet been decided.

Mr. Ryder: Table 1 below lists for the period since 1979 the number of civil service posts located or relocated out of the south-east, which total more than 15,000 posts. However, the list probably understates the total as some 6,000 posts created or relocated away from the south-east on Departments' own initiative prior to 1988 were not monitored in detail.

Invisible Trade

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors have led to the ending of the surplus on the United Kingdom's invisible trade.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The invisibles account is estimated to have been in surplus by £2·3 billion in 1989 and £1·2 billion in the first half of 1990.

Iraq

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Treasury co-operated with UNO in the preparation of a study on the impact of the United Nations sanctions against Iraq on other countries; and what is the assessment of the windfall gain for the United Kingdom in a year.

Mr. Maples: The United Kingdom, like most other countries, suffers overall rather than gains from higher oil prices. We have been prepared to commit very substantial resources, human and financial, to the international military effort in the Gulf region and to helping those countries most directly affected by the costs of making United Nations Sanctions against Iraq effective. The United Kingdom has played a very active part in the United Nations in dealing with Suddam Hussein's aggression. We were not consulted over the particular United Nations report to which the question refers and which appears to have been a purely internal United Nations document.

Correspondence

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to make a detailed reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne of 21 July on the matter of Mr. John D. Brock.

Mr. Maude: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 23 October.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Exports

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much is spent by each member state of the European Community on the marketing of agricultural exports to other member states within the Community.

Mr. Curry: The information is not available in the form requested. Information on the export marketing budgets of the national food and drink marketing organisations of certain member states is as follows:

Country and organisation	Year	Export marketing budgets[1] £ million
France
SOPEXA	1990	37

Central Marketing Agency	1990	10

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a breakdown of the money spent on marketing United Kingdom agricultural products abroad during 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Curry: Comprehensive information is not collected; marketing is a necessary activity of all food and drink export businesses. The estimated amounts spent on export marketing spent by Food From Britain, the national food marketing organisation, are as follows:

£ millions

Livestock (Metal Poisoning)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the cause of the restrictions imposed on the Food Protection (Emergency Prohibition) (Copper or Other Metal Poisoning) Order 1990 as well as the type of animals and number of animals involved and the contaminants involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: These restrictions were introduced by an order made under part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to protect consumers from the risk of eating contaminated food following a case of copper poisoning among a group of 19 lambs on a farm in East Sussex.

Tobacco

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ecus have been transferred to the tobacco sector of EAGGF in (a) 1989 and (b) 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Community Budget Authority (the Council and the European Parliament) transferred the following amounts to the tobacco sector:

	Million ecus
1990	200

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has given his support to additional money being transferred to the tobacco sector of the EAGGF; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom has long been critical of the EC tobacco regime and the expenditure which it incurs and has consistently pressed for improvements. The Commission is currently conducting a review of the regime and I shall be arguing for substantive change. However, tobacco is grown in some of the poorest parts of the Community and alternative crops cannot be easily identified.

In 1989 the costs of the tobacco regime were higher than originally estimated partly because of agrimonetary movements but mainly because production levels and intervention stocks were greater than forecast when the budget was fixed in 1988. As the expenditure was legitimately incurred within the rules for the sector, the Budgetary Authority (the Council and the European Parliament) agreed to regularise the situation in this and other sectors by transferring funds from sectors which had underspent. Overall, the 1989 FEOGA budget was underspent, after these adjustments, by some 2·4 billion ecu. Similar transfers from underspending sectors within the 1990 FEOGA budget to cover legitimate expenditure in other sectors, including tobacco, have recently been agreed.

Casualty Animals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations and controls cover the procedure whereby casualty animals are disposed of or are prevented from entering the human food chain; whether he has plans to review or change the procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is an offence to sell for human consumption meat which is unfit. In addition the Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977 require that a veterinary health certificate be issued for animals known or suspected to be injured or diseased, and for carcases of such animals, which are intended to be presented at the slaughterhouse. This certifies that the animal is not affected with any condition, nor has received any medication, which is liable to render the whole carcase unfit for human consumption. The requirement for compulsory certification is subject to certain exemptions relating to injuries of recent origin (such as during transit when a veterinarian will not be available) and, for welfare reasons, to sheep and lamb carcases, where a declaration by the owner is required. It is an offence to allow casualty animals or their carcases to enter a slaughterhouse under any other circumstances.

Meat from carcases which does not pass post-mortem examination or from knacker animals must be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the Meat (Sterilisation and Staining) Regulations 1982.

I am already considering whether any changes to the regulations in this area may be desirable.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he proposes to give farmers in the provision of incinerators and other means of disposing of casualty animals in the light of the new regulations regarding the use of offal.

Mr. Maclean: It is the responsibility of farmers to ensure that their casualty animals and fallen stock are disposed of properly in accordance with existing statutory provisions.

Livestock Premiums

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received proposing that the steer premium should be paid at store cattle marts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received no representations suggesting that the beef special premium should be payable in respect of male cattle sold through store markets. This is not an option under the EC regulations which govern the operation of the scheme. These provide only for the payment of premium on-farm (as is done in Northern Ireland) or at slaughter or on first marketing for slaughter (as is done in Great Britain).

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will arrange for the next ewe premium payment to be advanced in order to assist farmers' cash flows.

Mr. Curry: As we announced on 24 September, the second advance payment of sheep annual premium has been brought forward, and will be paid as soon as possible.

The final balancing payment cannot be determined by the European Commission until the necessary data are available, after the end of the marketing year in January 1991. Once the final rate has been set, payments should be completed quickly.

Food Imports

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on recent levels of food imports from (a) Hungary, (b) Poland, (c) Czechoslovakia and (d) the former East Germany.

Mr. Curry: Food imports in the last three years (by value) have been:

Research Projects

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list any other research and development projects he is planning to cut other than those carried out under the Barnes review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The content of my Department's research and development programme is subject to continuous review and adjustment as projects are completed and new work commenced in the light of current priorities. The level of funding of research and development by my Department is substantial and is set at £121 million this year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his methods for deciding which research projects are categorised as near-market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In general, projects are categorised as near-market if they offer the prospect of commercial application or exploitation whether as a product, process or system within a short enough time scale to justify investment by industry. Such near-market work is most appropriately funded by industry since it is the direct beneficiary and therefore better placed to judge priorities.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the research projects that have been closed or are due to be closed as a result of the Barnes review; if he will indicate in each case which year they are to be closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A comprehensive list is not available and can be produced only at disproportionate cost. The following two lists provide details of projects in the fisheries and food sectors which have been identified as near-market research for which funding by my Department has been, or is being, phased out in line with Government policy.

Fish Hygiene Regulations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of draft European Community Fish Hygiene Regulations Com (89) 645; and what steps he is proposing to take to assist fish markets to adapt to them.

Mr. Curry: Discussions on these measures in a Council working group began in July and are continuing. Grant aid will continue to be available through a range of national and EC schemes to assist improvements in certain market and port facilities, including projects designed to raise hygiene standards.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is available from the monthly notes deposited in the Library of the House.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent on the storage of (a) skimmed milk powder, (b) butter, (c) beef and (d) cereals in public and private intervention in the United Kingdom for the periods January to September 1989 and January to September 1990.

Animal Feedstuffs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the measures that cover the quality and content of animal feedstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The quality and content of animal feedingstuffs is controlled by wide-ranging EC legislation and implemented by United Kingdom legislation. The following is the legislation for which my department is responsible.

Agriculture Act 1970:
Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1988 as amended.

Medicines Act 1968: (as amended by the Animal Health and Welfare Act 1984)
Medicated (Medicated Animal Feeding Stuffs) Regulations 1989 (as amended) Medicines (Veterinary Drugs) (Pharmacy and Merchants' List) (No. 2) Order 1989 (as amended)

Animal Health Act 1981:
The Disease of Animals (Waste Food) Order 1973 (as amended)
The Importation of Hay and Straw Order 1979
The Importation of Processed Animal Protein Order 1981 (as amended)
The Meat (Sterilisation and Staining) Regulations 1982 (as amended)
The Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (No. 2) Order 1988 (as amended)
The Zoonoses Order 1989
The Processed Animal Protein Order 1989

There are also voluntary codes of practice in place for the control of Salmonella in animal feedingstuffs and for the use of veterinary medicated feedingstuffs.

The metabolisable energy working party, which is sponsored by my Department, has issued guidance to farmers on energy values of ruminant feeds.

Proposals for new regulations have been issued this week which will improve the labelling and composition requirements of animal feedingstuffs.

Abattoirs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the location and capacity of all abattoirs in the United Kingdom, indicating those which are up to European Community standard for the slaughter of animals for export.

Mr. Maclean: I am placing in the Library of the House a current list of abattoirs in England and Wales which identifies those which are export approved. The capacity of individual abattoirs will vary according to a variety of factors, although it is estimated that approximately 43 per cent. of British meat production is accounted for by export approved abattoirs.

The Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland have responsibility for abattoirs in those parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Community and national assistance is available to abattoir owners to bring them up to European Community standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Grants for the improvement of facilities have been available in the past to abattoir owners to help them meet necessary standards. They remain available for investment projects which qualify for assistance under the regional selective assistance scheme or the regional enterprise grant scheme, both of which are administered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Agricultural Mortgage Corporation

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conclusions he has reached following the review of the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation which he announced on 21 June; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have considered the comments which I have received in response to my earlier announcement about the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation very carefully. I am satisfied that it would be generally beneficial to remove the present statutory restrictions on the corporation, including those on the range of financial services which it can offer. This will require legislation, which I hope to introduce at the first convenient opportunity.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his assessment of the impact on local government expenditure if all the primary and secondary schools now allowed to opt out did so.

Mr. Eggar: The impact would depend on what changes were made to the arrangements for funding grant-maintained schools.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Special Constables

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards special constables; and what have been the difficulties in the implementation of that policy.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our policy is to encourage chief officers of police to increase the numbers of special constables and to deploy them, after suitable training, on interesting and challenging duties in support of the regular police. Over the past 10 years there has been a decline in the number of special constables, but we hope to redress this through a national publicity campaign starting in 1991 and extending over the next three years.

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables there are at present; how many there have been in each of the past 10 years; and how many there are expected to be over the next five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of 1989 there were 15,589 special constables in England and Wales. The numbers enrolled on 31 December of each year from 1980 were as follows:

	Special constables
1981	14,978
1982	15,160
1983	15,331
1984	16,021
1985	16,161
1986	16,070
1988	15,788

It is not possible to predict the number of special constables for the next five years but we shall be launching a national publicity campaign in 1991 with the aim of increasing the numbers.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants are employed by his Department at each grade; and how many in each grade are women.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office employs some 42,000 non-industrial staff in more than 150 grades. The information requested is therefore provided in the table by occupational group. Each occupational group comprises staff in a number of grades dealing with similar work.

Prison Population

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the percentage of the prison population, according to latest available figures (a) under the age of 21 years and (b) under the age of 18 years in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) France, (iii) Germany, (iv) Italy, (v) Spain and the Republic of Ireland, (vi) Belgium, (vii) Denmark, (viii) Greece, (ix) Luxembourg, (x) the Netherlands and (xi) Portugal.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is published twice a year by the Council of Europe in its prison information bulletin. The latest information, for 1 September 1988, is given in the table and appears in table 1 of issue No. 12, a copy of which is held in the Library. The information for Denmark and West Germany is not available. The proportion of the prison population aged under 21 in England and Wales has subsequently fallen to 21 per cent. on 31 August 1990.

An article on "International comparisons of prison populations" by Collier and Tarling (Home Office research bulletin No. 23, pages 48 to 54) showed that the figures for different countries are unlikely to be strictly comparable because the definitions of prisons and prisoners vary from one country to another, reflecting different legal and administrative systems. Examples of differences in the definitions are the inclusion or exclusion in a country's figures of juvenile offenders and mentally disordered offenders.

Marital Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to bring in legislation to make it a criminal offence for men to rape their wives.

Mr. John Patten: The Law Commission is reviewing the law in this area in conjunction with its work on domestic violence. I understand that it plans to publish a consultation paper next month. We shall consider any final recommendations the Law Commission may make.

Broadcasting Bill

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations in writing he has received (a) criticising, (b) opposing or expressing reservations and (c) supporting his announcement on 4 September that the Government intend to ask the Commons to overturn amendments to the Broadcasting Bill passed by the House of Lords concerning the inclusion in the quality threshold documentaries of programmes with an educational purpose and social action programmes; and if he will list the persons and organisations from whom representations were received.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

By Tuesday 23 October 1990 the Home Office and the Office of Arts and Libraries had received about 120 representations from members of the public or organisations urging us not to seek to reverse these amendments.

Daylight Saving

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to report his conclusions and recommendation on the consultation on possible changes in time to produce daylight saving.

Mrs. Rumbold: The views expressed in response to the Green Paper "Summer Time—A Consultation Document" (Cm 722) disclosed a considerable difference of opinion in the United Kingdom. The Government have not yet reached a decision on what further action might be taken.

Conservative Party Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total policing costs arising from the Conservative party conference in Bournemouth; and what proportion of the cost will be met by the local authorities in Bournemouth.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of Dorset that the additional costs of policing the 1990 Conservative party conference in Bournemouth were estimated at £2 million. The additional costs of policing will be met by the Dorset police authority. Under the normal police funding arrangements, the Government contribute both directly through police grant—which is at 51 per cent.—and indirectly through revenue support grant.

TRANSPORT

Roll-on Roll-off Ferries

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what approaches he has made to the International Maritime Organisation, Lloyd's of London, or other similar insurance markets concerning minimum safety standards of construction and operation of roll-on roll-off ferries or similar ships and where details of such communications may be found; if he will consider setting a date by which a programme of rising standards can be applied to all such ships arriving at or departing from British ports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Amendments to the international convention for the safety of life at sea 1974, proposed by the United Kingdom in 1987—concerning safety standards for the construction and operation of ro-ro ferries are now in force. In addition, my Department is urgently seeking agreement at the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) to higher residual stability standards for existing ferries. The standard proposed is that which came into force earlier this year for new passenger ships. The time scale for implementation within the proposed amendment is three years. I will place copies of the paper to IMO in the House Library.

Approaches to improve ferry safety have also been made to our near European maritime neighbours.

British Rail

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his Department's statutory responsibilities to overview and control the operations of British Rail trains especially those concerning their (a) safety, (b) availability of proper accommodation, (c) cleanliness and (d) punctuality.

Mr. Freeman: The responsibility for running a safe and efficient railway is placed by statute on British Rail. The Secretary of State has powers under the Regulation of Railways Act 1871, the Road and Rail Traffic Act 1933 and level crossing enactments, relating to the approval and inspection of new works and to the investigation of accidents.

The Secretary of State sets British Rail three-year objectives covering financial performance and quality of service on a non-statutory basis, and the Department monitors BR's performance on these matters.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now initiate an inquiry into the loss of MV Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A formal investigation into the loss of the Derbyshire took place between October 1987 and March 1988.

New material is now being examined by the marine accident investigation branch. Once it has concluded its investigations, a report will be sent to the Secretary of State. After consideration of that report, he will decide whether or not the formal investigation should be reopened.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is now taking to assist the families bereaved after the loss of the MV Derbyshire.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no plans to offer financial assistance to the dependants of those who were lost in the MV Derbyshire tragedy in 1980.

Pipes and Cables

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 October to the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, North, what instructions he has given to local authorities about the depositing of pipes and cables in common ducts; and for what reasons intermittent digging of streets for pipes and cables by a variety of statutory undertakers is permitted.

Mr. Chope: None. It is for local highway authorities to determine whether or not it is feasible or desirable to provide common ducts below streets. The powers of statutory undertakers to break open streets are governed by the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950, which contains no requirement on highway authorities or undertakers to co-ordinate their digging up of streets. This is a matter we intend to put right in the proposed legislation to implement the recommendations of the Horne report.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what he estimates to be the cost to local authorities of failing to implement the powers granted to them for rationalising the laying of pipes and cables below ground.

Mr. Chope: It is not possible to make any such estimate.

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Patrick Sheri

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a work permit was issued to Mr. Patrick Sheri to allow him to perform in the production of "Land of Dreams" broadcast on BBC television on 8 August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A work permit was not issued in respect of this performance.

HEALTH

Osteoporosis

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to fund the development of the new test which identifies women at greatest risk of osteoporosis.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of Health has commissioned a critical review of screening techniques for detecting osteoporosis. We hope to have the results next year. I understand that the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science, funds research into biochemical screening techniques for identifying women at greatest risk of osteoporosis.

North East Thames RHA

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all land sales approved by his Department by North East Thames regional health authority for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department's approval is not needed for land sales carried out by regional health authorities and the information requested is not held in the Department. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of North East Thames RHA for details.

Community Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the finances he proposes to make available to local authorities in England in each year of his timetable for the implementation of those parts of the National Health Service and Community Care Act that relate to the development of community-based care for elderly and disabled people.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For details of the finance to be made available to local authorities for phase 1 of the implementation of our community care proposals in 1991-92, I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State made on 18 July at columns 999-1014. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment expects to make an announcement shortly on the local authority grant settlement which will include proposals for standard spending assessments for personal social services. Decisions on resources for phases 2 and 3 will be taken in the appropriate public expenditure survey years.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out his timetable for the implementation of those parts of the National Health Service and Community Care Act that relate to the development of community-based care for elderly and disabled people in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State made on 18 July at columns 999-1014.

Abortion

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will issue guidelines to the medical profession relating to the interpretation of the clause added to the Abortion Bill about the termination of pregnancies where there may be grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman or where there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The category of "substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped" is one of the grounds for abortion in the Abortion Act 1967. The application of that test is, and will remain, a matter of clinical judgment for decision by the two doctors who are required under the Act to form their opinion in good faith. That will also be the case for the new ground
"to prevent grave permanent injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman", a form of words already specified as a ground for abortion in the emergency provisions in section 1(4) of the 1967 Act.

Residential Home Patients

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any proposals to amend local authority regulations concerning the treatment of capital of residents of local authority residential homes to bring them into line with similar regulations for the payment of income support.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper, "Caring for People", makes it clear that our intention is to align the local authority charging rules for residential care with those for the treatment of resources, both income and capital, under the income support scheme. The details of the alignment have yet to be worked out.

WALES

Community Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the finances he proposes to make available to local authorities in Wales in each year of his timetable for the implementation of those parts of the National Health Service and Community Care Act that relate to the development of community-based care for elderly and disabled people in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The cost of implementing the first stage of the changes in 1991-92 has been taken into account in the figures for the revenue support grant settlement announced in July. The indicative amount for local authority expenditure on personal social services will be announced later in the year, along with the level of specific grant for community care training and support purposes. In addition, central expenditure of £330,000 is planned for 1991-92 for the continuation of demonstration projects on assessment and care management begun in 1990-91 with a similar level of central expenditure.

The allocation of earmarked central resources in respect of bids for schemes to promote more flexible forms of community care for elderly people and those with physical or sensory disabilities will be announced in January 1991.

For future years central support for local authority expenditure will be determined as part of each year's local authority revenue settlement and the public expenditure survey. The level of resources to be transferred from social security programmes to the local authorities in 1993-94 to enable them to carry out the full range of their new responsibilities for assessment and the procurement of care will be determined in the 1992 public expenditure survey.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out his timetable for the implementation of those parts of the National Health Service and Community Care Act that relate to the development of community-based care for the elderly and disabled people in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend on 18 July and the detailed programme of implementation sent to him under cover of the Department's letter of 10 September—a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands development corporation has spent on infrastructure in the area of the Royal Docks since its inception; and how much further it is committed to spend.

Mr. Portillo: The London Docklands development corporation has spent from 1981 to the end of September 1990 £222 million on infrastructure in the royal docks area. A further £28 million is committed. The corporation is also funding the DLR Beckton extension estimated to cost £248 million, most of which falls in the royal docks area.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the memorandum of agreement between the London Docklands development corporation and the Newham borough council has been carried out; and what remains to be carried out.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 5 April 1990 by my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) at column 777.

Over £26 million has now been spent on the projects which were listed in that reply.

Of the projects originally identified as possible in the memorandum, 12 have been completed or started, or will start this financial year and two are contingent on the content of future development yet to be determined.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is in the budget of the London Docklands development corporation for the community services division for the current year; and what it has been in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: The current budget for the community services division in the financial year 1990-91 is £27 million.

The community services division has existed only since 1988. However, expenditure on community projects in the last five years is as follows:

1989-90	[1]44
1988-89	9
1987-88	5
1985-86	4

[1] This figure includes £19·8 million for the development of over 400 new homes by a consortium of housing associations at Winsor Park.

LDDC's major transport programme is also of substantial benefit to local communities.

Golf Courses

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the development of new golf courses.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Proposals for the development of new golf courses fall to be considered under normal planning policies. The draft planning policy guidance note on sport and recreation issued on 16 October indicates that sites for recreational use—which could in suitable circumstances include golf courses—may in some areas of the urban fringe act as an important buffer between agricultural and urban uses to protect crops from damage.

River Estuaries

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that the needs of conservation are taken into account when considering developments in river estuaries.

Mr. Trippier: The majority of our estuaries encompass areas that are important for nature conservation and which are protected as sites of special scientific interest. Those with the most important bird interest are either designated, or under consideration for designation, as special protection areas under the EEC birds directive. The Department's circular 27/87 advises local planning authorities to take full account of the nature conservation importance of all these areas when considering development proposals.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost of employing the two consulting firms, Watson Hawksley and Rofe, Kennard and Lapworth, to assist the drinking water inspectorate by carrying out inspections of 17 water supply companies.

Mr. Trippier: The drinking water inspectorate is currently negotiating consultancy commissions for inspections beyond those already announced. For commercial reasons, it would not be appropriate to reveal costs while negotiations are proceeding.

Water Companies, Southern England

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water companies in southern England have not so far imposed a ban on the use of hosepipes during the current year.

Mr. Trippier: The following water companies in southern England (Bristol to The Wash) have not so far this year imposed a ban on the use of hosepipes in any part of their supply areas:

The Bournemouth and District Water Company,
Cambridge Water Company,
Cholderton and District Water Company Limited,
East Anglian Water Company,
Portsmouth Water plc,
Tendring Hundred Waterworks Company,
Wessex Water Services Limited and West Hampshire Water Company.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water companies in southern England draw all or most of their supplies from rivers rather than from reservoirs or other sources.

Mr. Trippier: The following water companies in southern England (Bristol to The Wash) draw most of their supplies direct from rivers rather than from reservoirs or other sources:

The Bournemouth and District Water Company,
East Anglian Water Company,
North Surrey Water Company and West Hampshire Water Company.

Rivers do, of course, feed reservoirs to varying degrees.

Housing, Congleton

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been on the homelessness register in the borough of Congleton in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Local authorities report the number of households accepted and found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and the Housing Act 1985.

The available figures for Congleton borough council are as follows:

	Households
1980	43
1981	45
1982	32
1983	42
1984	57
1985	57
1986	[1]54
1987	49
1988	61
1989	64

[1] Estimated from HIP1 return.

The information is published quarterly (half-yearly before 1985) in "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", which is in the Library.

London Boroughs (Capital Allocation)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated levels of capitalallocation to London boroughs in 1990-91 by the London residuary body.

Mr. Key: The London residuary body has recently indicated that it does not expect to make a general distribution of capital receipts to London boroughs in 1990-91. The total sum previously distributed is £486 million. There will, however, be a special distribution to inner London boroughs in 1990-91 to reimburse them for certain items of educational expenditure inherited from the abolished ILEA.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will accept a nomination from the Association of London Authorities for membership of the London residuary body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend is always prepared to consider suggestions for appointment but he sees no need at present to make further new appointments to the London residuary body.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expected publication date of the 1989-90 annual report of the London residuary body.

Mr. Key: The London residuary body expects to publish its annual report and accounts for 1989-90 shortly.

Historic Houses

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was given in grants by local authorities to historic houses in each of the last five years: and how many houses were involved.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that this information is not available.

Cornish Coast (Wildlife Losses)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the loss of wildlife earlier this year on beaches between Portreath and Newquay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 October 1990]: I have no information of unusual losses of wildlife in the area this year. We know of 28 strandings over the past 12 months; three of which are broadly in the Portreath/Newquay area.

The one individual found in that area that has had a post mortem was obviously young, but suffering from severe parasitic infestation and wasting of the muscles, although (as is often the case) no obvious cause of death had been established. Samples suitable for contaminant analysis have been taken from this individual.

Printing (Toxicity)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what weight of hydrocarbons is released to the atmosphere during a typical hour's operation of platemaking and photographical processes in printworks; and what regulations exist to control such atmospheric discharges.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: Total annual emissions of hydrocarbons—measured as volatile organis compounds (VOCs)—from the printing and ink manufacturing industry are estimated at 41,000 tonnes per year. Disaggregated hourly data for the processes specified are not available.

Should such processes cause statutory nuisance, they are controlled by local authorities under part III of the Public Health Act 1936. In future, subject to the approval of the Environmental Protection Bill, we intend to schedule those printing works with the greatest pollution potential for control under the new air pollution control regime proposed in part I of the Bill.

The United Kingdom is taking a leading part within the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (UNECE), which is preparing a protocol on VOCs. This will lead to cuts in emissions from all sources.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what volumes of toxic effluent are discharged each hour from a typical printworks; and what regulations exist to control such discharges.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: Information on discharges from printworks is not held centrally. The registers held by the National Rivers Authority contain discharge consent conditions for individual works and these will include those for volume.

Consents for discharges to sewer are granted by sewerage undertakers under the Public Health (Drainage of Trade Premises) Act 1937, and for discharges to controlled waters by the National Rivers Authority under the Water Act 1989. An application to discharge a prescribed substance into a sewer must be referred by the sewerage undertaker to the Secretary of State under the Trade Effluents (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1989, as amended. If an EC list I dangerous substance is discharged into controlled waters, the National Rivers Authority must set a consent consistent with its obligations under the Surface Waters (Dangerous Substances) (Classification) Regulations 1989.

European Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what matters in regard to the mitigation of global warming were discussed at the European Environment Council in Luxembourg on 4 October.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: No such meeting took place—the next meeting of the Environment Council is on 29 October.

London Docklands (Toxic Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any reports from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the levels of toxic pollution measurable in London docklands since January 1985.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: I have received no reports from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) on toxic pollution in London docklands. HMIP has no statutory role in regulating toxic waste on land.

Halon 1301

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the environmental and human consequences of fighting a fire with the chemical Halon 1301.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: Halon 1301 is a powerful ozone-depleting chemical and an effective fire-fighting agent of low toxicity. Under the Montreal protocol halon production and consumption will be cut by 50 per cent. by 1995 and phased out by 2000 except for a limited number of essential uses, to be decided internationally by 1993 and kept under review thereafter.

Drinking Water (Northern Region)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where the drinking water inspectorate officer responsible for the Northern region is based.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 October 1990]: Responsibility within the drinking water inspectorate for the English regions has not been assigned to individual inspectors. All inspectors are based in London.

SCOTLAND

Road Accidents

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many road accidents there were, both fatal and non-fatal, in each of the years 1984 to 1989 inclusive; and how many involved drivers aged under 24 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

	Reported personal injury accidents		Reported personal injury accidents involving at least one driver aged under 24
	Fatal	Non-fatal	Fatal	Non-fatal
1984	537	19,437	197	8,884
1985	550	20,094	223	8,797
1986	537	19,281	218	8,082
1987	517	18,140	183	7,540
1988	499	18,596	211	7,667
1989	496	20,112	180	8,442

Sea Trout Stocks

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has commissioned into the decline of sea trout stocks in Scottish waters.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Studies of sea trout by scientists from the DAFS freshwater fisheries laboratory at Pitlochry have concentrated on areas in the north-west of Scotland where catches of sea trout appear to have fallen sharply in 1989. Work so far has included detailed sampling of sea trout fisheries in Loch Hope, Loch Maree, Achiltibuie, Loch Shiel, Loch Morar, Loch Eilt and a group of lochs in Skye with analysis of the size, age, sex composition of the catches and, where possible, of mature fish in the spawning burns. Surveys of juvenile distribution and abundance, including the physical and chemical evaluation of habitats, have also been undertaken in burns flowing into Lochs Hope, Maree and Eilt.

The preliminary results of this work suggest that, as in the west of Ireland, growth and survival rates in fresh water are within the normal range. This points to lower survival rates at sea as the primary reason for the lower number of returning adult sea trout.

The reasons for apparently poorer marine survival are not yet clear. Sea trout at sea, or returning to estuaries, are now being sampled to evaluate their overall condition, diet and status in terms of disease and parasites. It is too early yet to draw any conclusions from this work or the other continuing studies in north-west Scotland.

DAFS scientists are also undertaking long-term studies of the dynamics of migratory trout populations in eastern Scotland and analysis of the sea trout catch statistics collected for Scotland as a whole.

Dental Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dentists operating national health service schemes for their patients have now changed to private practice only; and how many people who cannot afford private dental services have been affected by this change (a) in Greater Glasgow, (b) in Strathclyde and (c) in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Dental Association of Scotland; and if he discussed the increasing numbers of dentists refusing to operate National Health Service schemes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials of the Scottish Home and Health Department met the Scottish General Dental Services Committee of the British Dental Association on 13 June 1990, to discuss the new contract for general dental practitioners. On 12 July 1990 the British Dental Association agreed that the new contract would be introduced on 1 October 1990, and that the proposals were in the best interests of patients, dentists and dentistry.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of junior doctors in the Scottish national health service were working, on average, more than 70 hours weekly, for each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the hours worked by junior doctors is not collected centrally, but just over 82 per cent. of junior doctors were contracted to work more than 70 hours weekly at 30 September 1989—1989 is the first year for which such information is available centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, Official Report, 16 October, column 805, if he will list all steps taken to improve the working arrangements for junior doctors in Scotland and especially their working hours arrangements.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1983 regular rotas more onerous than one night and one weekend on duty in two were banned. In 1985 guidance was issued to health boards on arrangements designed to minimise the occasions when doctors in hard-pressed specialties were required to work rotas more onerous than one in two when covering for absent colleagues. In 1989 we introduced measures aimed at eliminating rotas more onerous than one night and one weekend in three.

A working party, set up by my hon. Friend the Minister for Health, is currently considering at national level how further improvements in junior doctors' working arrangements may be achieved. We are represented on that working party. Meantime we have asked boards to keep all onerous rotas under continuous review and to eliminate them as soon as circumstances permit.

While still continuing to work towards eliminating onerous rotas, in 1988 and again in 1989 the Government accepted the recommendation of the doctors' and dentists' review body to pay enhanced rates to junior doctors working long hours.

Heart Disease

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's new initiatives to prevent further increases in the number of people suffering from heart disease in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The consultation document "Health Education in Scotland: A National Policy Statement", which I launched on 9 October, identified coronary heart disease as a national priority for health education and set out our target of reducing mortality from heart disease for people under age 65 by 25 per cent. by the year 2000.

A twin strategy involving both an individual and a population approach is proposed. The individual strategy envisages family doctors identifying people who are at risk, thus enabling appropriate counselling or necessary treatment to be provided. The population strategy consists of promoting, at national and local levels, the positive life style approach and in particular the aspects of healthy eating, non-smoking and exercise. National campaigns will be undertaken by the Health Education Board, which will replace the Scottish Health Education Group on 1 April 1991, and will be complemented by action at local level by health boards and voluntary organisations.

Premature deaths from coronary heart disease in Scotland declined by 17 per cent. between 1980 and 1988 and the enhanced health education effort now proposed will facilitate further progress towards the target I have set.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times the Greater Glasgow health board has moved its head office during the last three years; what has been the total cost involved in these moves; what was the cost of obtaining, fitting out, equipping and stone cleaning 112 Ingram street; and what was the cost of transferring the accounts, finance and wages departments from Ingram street to other premises.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 October 1990]: Greater Glasgow health board has made only one major relocation of its head office in the past three years.

The total cost was £1·25 million; this includes a cost to the board of £0·62 million for work at Ingram street and of £0·46 million for transferring certain departments. The changes will release savings of £2·9 million on revenue expenditure from January 1989 to June 1992. These savings will be used to improve patient care for the population of Greater Glasgow.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Audit Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he will launch an independent investigation into the influence of major firms on audit policy making;

(2) whether he will investigate the influence of major accountancy firms on the major policy-making committees of the accountancy profession.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 5 April at column 804.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list all statutory provisions relating to the making of audit policy by the Auditing Practices Committee.

Mr. Redwood: The Auditing Practices Committee is established by CCAB Ltd., a company registered under the Companies Act, whose shareholders are the chartered bodies of accountants. The committee's activities are therefore not founded on statutory provisions.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to introduce legislation to require auditors to actively satisfy themselves that a company is a going concern.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to his questions on 5 March at column 413, 27 March at column 125 and 2 April at column 399.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish a table showing how many of Britain's top 100 companies are audited by firms criticised by his Department's inspectors.

Mr. Redwood: The hon. Member is already aware of the auditing firms criticised in inspectors' reports published since June 1979 (Official Report, 19 December 1989, column 139 and 21 February 1990, column 789). In addition two reports were published on 29 August 1990:

Name of Company	Name of Accountants
Minet Holdings plc	Black, Geoghegan and Till.
WMD Underwriting Agencies Limited.	Josolyne Layton-Bennett and Co. Arthur Young McClelland Moores and Co.
Alexander Howden Holdings plc.	Josolyne Layton-Bennett and Co. de Paula Turner Lake and Co. Peat Marwick Mitchell and Co., Bermuda. Arthur Young McClelland Moores and Co.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether she will provide a list showing the number of accountancy firm partners which have been barred from practising as a result of criticisms in the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors' reports.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 26 March at column 25.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to introduce legislation to enable individual shareholders to sue company auditors for negligence.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his question on 26 February at column 15.

Industrial Development Policy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes any changes in industrial development policy following the United Kingdom's entry into the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no plans to make changes in our policies towards industry because of ERM entry.

Company Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, arising from the Caparo case, he intends to propose any amendments to company law.

Mr. Redwood: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to introduce legislation to require all public companies to publish profit forecasts.

Mr. Redwood: The Companies Act 1985 requires that the directors' report shall contain an indication of the likely future developments in the business of the company and of its subsidiary undertakings. While it is open to directors to include profit forecasts in their report, I have no plans to extend the existing statutory requirement.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters.

Post Office

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the head of the Post Office; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of the Post Office, Sir Bryan Nicholson, on 26 September. They discussed various matters of mutual interest and concern.

Royal Mail

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the head of the Royal Mail; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the managing director of the Royal Mail, Mr. Bill Cockburn, on 2 October. They discussed various matters of mutual interest and concern.

Israel

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to oppose the Arab trade boycott of Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. As I made clear in my recent speech to the CBI conference on Israel, Her Majesty's Government are opposed to and deplore all trade boycotts that lack international support and authority.

Home Accidents

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the 1988 figures on the causes and consequences of accidents in the home were due to be published; when he now intends to publish them; and if he will give the reasons for the delay.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 23 October 1990]: The 12th report of the home accident surveillance system (HASS) covering 1988 data is expected to be published in November 1990, which is later than projected. A number of factors have contributed to delay, principally the extension of the system to cover leisure accidents in order to collect data that can be supplied to the European Commission for the EHLASS (European home and leisure accident surveillance system) demonstration project. The introduction of leisure accident surveillance into HASS has required extensive and complex changes to the computer system handling HASS data. Work is well advanced to replace the current HASS computer system to ensure these problems do not recur in the future.

Retail Sector

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the factors underlying the performance of major high street retailing companies since 1987, and on their prospects in the next 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The performance of the retail sector as a whole is clearly influenced by developments in the economy generally. But the performance of individual retailers depends on the extent to which they meet the needs of their customers. This will no doubt continue to be the case in the next 12 months.

Overseas Boards

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the members, and their affiliations, of the British Overseas Trade Board and of the Overseas Projects Board.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Giant Hogweed

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he proposes to take to eradicate giant hogweed in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Departments of the Environment and of Agriculture have co-operated to produce a leaflet which gives advice to landowners on the problem of giant hogweed and its control. Control and eradication is a matter for landowners and occupiers on whose land the plant is growing. Copies of the leaflet are available in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether giant hogweed is listed as a weed which landowners should destroy; what advice has been given to landowners as to the most successful methods of destruction; and whether he has published a list of weedkillers which can be used with success on this plant.

Mr. Brooke: Giant hogweed is not listed in any Northern Ireland legislation as a weed which landowners shall destroy. The Departments of Agriculture and of the Environment have jointly published a leaflet entitled, "Giant Hogweed: The Problem and its Control", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the areas of Northern Ireland where giant hogweed is known to grow.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has no detailed information on the occurrence of giant hogweed. Its distribution tends to be localised on river banks and lake sides. It is found mostly in the south of Northern Ireland and in particular along the banks of the Rivers Bann, Lagan, Ballinderry and Blackwater.

Hip Replacements

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate the number of hip replacement operations in each of the past three years, indicating the number of patients from each board area and by operating hospital.

Mr. Needham: The information held centrally for each of the last three years for which figures are available is set out in the table. It is likely however that these figures understate the true level of activity at Musgrave Park hospital.

(2) what information is available to indicate the number of hip replacement operations which were done privately in each of the last three years in national health service hospitals.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not collected and held centrally.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to indicate current waiting lists for hip replacement operations.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

EHSSB (Musgrave Park Hospital)	— 589
WHSSB (Altnagelvin Hospital)	— 203
NHSSB (Coleraine Hospital)	— 20

Kidney Disease

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any assessment has been made of the number of renal patients who would benefit from erthropoetin; and how many are currently receiving it.

Mr. Needham: No detailed assessment has been made but medical opinion suggests that up to half of the 160 patients receiving dialysis treatment in Northern Ireland would benefit from erthropoetin; 48 are currently receiving it.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what kidney dialysis facilities exist in the Province; and whether there are any plans for opening a unit in (a) Coleraine and (b) Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: The main renal unit at the Belfast City hospital provides dialysis services for the whole of the Province and is supported by a satellite dialysis unit at Tyrone county hospital, Omagh. There are no plans at present for a unit in either Coleraine or Londonderry.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many consultant nephrologists are employed in the Northern Ireland health service; and what is the ratio of nephrologists to kidney patients.

Mr. Needham: There are four consultant nephrologists in Northern Ireland. Information on their work load is not collected and the ratio cannot be calculated.

Organ Donor Cards

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many organ donor cards have been distributed in the Province; and what consideration has he given to having them countersigned by next of kin and placing the names of all card-carriers on a computer available to all intensive therapy units.

Mr. Needham: About 125,000 organ donor cards are distributed each year in the Province and arrangements have been made for a donor card section to be included in the new form of driving licence due to be introduced from 1 January next year. Consideration is also being given to a range of initiatives aimed at increasing the supply of donor organs including computerisation of the names of card-carriers and improvements to the existing donor card.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Coins

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate by denomination the number of coins in circulation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maples: The estimated number of coins in circulation in the United Kingdom, by denomination, at 31 March 1990 is:

Denomination	Coins (million)
50p	676
20p	1,295
10p	1,510
5p	2,320
2p	3,500
1p	5,600

Oil Production

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the likely increased revenue in corporation tax paid by oil companies as a result of a $1 per barrel increase in the price of oil over a year.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that extra corporation tax receipts from the North sea from a sustained increase in the oil price of $1 per barrel would be about £50 million in a full year assuming no change in the exchange rate or in company spending in the North sea.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Seals

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate how many seals there are in the North sea and what effect they have on fish stocks.

Mr. Curry: It is estimated that there are approximately 55,000 seals in the North sea. At present, there are no definitive data available as to the exact mix of the many fish species in the North sea, both of commercial and non-commercial interest, in the diet of seals and any local variations and the consequent effect seals have on fish stocks. Both the Scottish Office and this Department have commissioned research on the diet and foraging behaviour of certain seal colonies.

Sea Dumping

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on a worldwide ban on sea dumping by 1995; what discussions he has had regarding the proposal for such a ban by Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden at the forthcoming London dumping convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government's policy has been to terminate dumping at sea of liquid industrial wastes and flyash in the United Kingdom as environmentally acceptable practicable alternatives on land become available. The United Kingdom will be seeking at the meeting of the London dumping convention next week to clarify the implications of the proposal made for a global ban on industrial waste dumping.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Border Checks, Europe

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterparts of Germany, France, the Benelux countries and Italy in order to sign the agreement to (a) remove all checks of people travelling across the borders with those countries and (b) establish closer police and judicial co-operation with them.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary holds regular discussions with his counterparts from all European Community member states on matters relating to free movement of people in the Community. We have no plans to join the Schengen arrangements, but are committed to closer police and judicial co-operation with all our partners.

Latin America

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to propose closer and improved economic and cultural co-operation with Latin American democratic countries at the next meeting of the European Council in Rome.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We support closer ties between the European Community and Latin America. I have written to the Italian Foreign Minister proposing ways to strengthen the relationship through increased trade liberalisation in the context of the GATT round. A meeting between Foreign Ministers of the Community and Latin America countries on 20 December will provide a further opportunity to discuss improved co-operation.

British Electricity International Ltd.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will countermand the embargo imposed by British Electricity International Ltd., on the overseas trading decision of National Power, on trade with Israel, in compliance with the Arab trade boycott on Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: It would not be appropriate for me to interfere in the running by National Power and British Electricity International of their businesses. Decisions on overseas trade are a matter for them. The Government are opposed to and deplore all trade boycotts that lack international support and authority. This is clearly stated in written guidance by the Department of Trade and Industry. My Department is drawing the attention of National Power and British Electricity International to this guidance, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

British Forces (Gulf)

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are now stationed in the Gulf region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom has committed a total of some 16,000 service personnel to the multinational effort in the Gulf, of whom some 10,000 are already in the region.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the situation in the Gulf.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the crisis in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces have been deployed to the Gulf at the request of Saudi Arabia and other countries to help deter further aggression by Iraq and in support of United Nations Security Council resolutions calling for an unconditional Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and the restoration of Kuwait's legitimate Government. So far, Iraq has shown no signs of being willing to comply with the United Nations' demands.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning Her Majesty's forces held in Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are in regular contact with our embassy. On the latest information, we believe that all members of the British liaison team are safe. We continue to press for the return of all British hostages.

Royal Marines Reserve

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current numerical strength of the Royal Marines Reserve.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The strength of the Royal Marines Reserve as at 30 September 1990 was 1,132.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans he has to strengthen Her Majesty's forces in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently no plans for further major United Kingdom deployments in support of the multinational effort in the Gulf, but the situation is kept under constant review.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the running costs of the operations in the Gulf, and what areas of expenditure, are being met by foreign Governments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Host nations in the Gulf are providing various forms of support for our forces, including free fuel. Other countries have also provided assistance. We are continuing to develop the arrangements for this support, and are discussing further ways in which our allies might assist.

TRANSPORT

Vibroplant, Peterborough

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the report on the explosives incident at Vibroplant, Peterborough, will be published; and if he will make a statement on the current position.

Mr. Chope: The report by the Health and Safety Executive of its investigation into the explosion on 22 March 1989 is published today. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

The HSE investigation into the incident concluded that the source of the fire and cause of the resulting explosion was a box of Cerium fusehead combs in transit to a local fireworks manufacturer. The combs were in unauthorised and unsafe packaging. On 11 April 1990, the company operating the vehicle was fined £250,000 at Peterborough Crown court.

In line with the undertaking given at the time by my hon. Friend the Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on dangerous substances sub-committee considering the major hazard aspects of the transport of dangerous substances will study the report both for its general relevance to transport questions and its specific relevance to the safe transport of explosives.

Executive Officers

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many jobs offered by his Department to executive officer recruits offer above the adult minimum starting salaries; what is the spine point that is offered in each case; and whether they are offered in (a) London and the south-east or (b) elsewhere.

Mr. McLoughlin: The normal minimum starting salary for adult recruits (ie those who are 20 years or above) is minimum of the pay scale plus two spine points. The following figures show the starting salaries awarded to all adult direct entry EO recruits to the Department of Transport from April 1989, the date it split from the Department of the Environment, to the present.

Red Routes

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has finalised proposals for the implementation of the red route pilot scheme in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Following the announcement to the House on 27 March at columns 222-24 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of the intention to conduct a pilot scheme for a priority route network in London we have conducted an extensive consultation exercise on it through publications, public meetings, and site visits and discussions. This culminated in exhibitions of our initial proposals from 14 August to 28 September. A brochure and a leaflet were widely circulated and copies are in the Library. As a result of comments received we have accepted certain changes to the proposals largely aimed at increasing provision for loading and unloading to satisfy essential business needs. Plans of the final proposals are being made available to the boroughs concerned and a leaflet will be published for general interest.

We need now to make a start on the pilot scheme itself as soon as possible. We intend to bring the new signing and lining, including bus lanes, into force on the trunk road part of the route—the A1 from Highgate to the Angel—on 7 January. Preliminary works will take place during December. Further measures such as improved facilities for pedestrians and cyclists will follow as soon as possible. Implementation of measures on local roads will depend on the boroughs concerned. I hope that they will be able to introduce them quickly. Enforcement will be the key to the success of the pilot scheme, and the Metropolitan police have agreed the timetable for this start on 7 January.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the projected date for the introduction of red routes into London.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I have given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) on the implementation of the pilot scheme. Full implementation of the network depends on legislation which will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce red routes in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to section 2 of the consultation document on the "Traffic in London" legislative proposals published on 23 July.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received concerning the proposed red route from Highgate to the City; if any of these have been in its favour; and what replies he has sent.

Mr. Chope: As a result of the public exhibitions of proposals 343 responses were received. Other comments were made, some in favour and some against, at public meetings and numerous on-site discussions. In response to these representations, some of the detailed proposals have been changed.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made by his Department of the introduction of priority routes in Paris; and if he will make such information available to those currently involved in the consultation exercise about red routes.

Mr. Chope: Officials visited Paris earlier this month to obtain information. Axes rouges (red routes) were introduced last month on 27 km of roads in central Paris. Although it is too early to make a full assessment, a network of 100 km is planned. The initial effect has been to increase average speeds significantly with little increase in traffic.

London Traffic Commissioner

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the powers of London traffic commissioner; to whom this person will report; and what will be the involvement with London borough councils.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to section 2 of the consultation document on the "Traffic in London" legislative proposals published on 23 July.

British Rail

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance is issued to British Rail regarding co-operation with other agencies in planning emergency liaison procedures.

Mr. Freeman: Such guidance as is necessary, depending on the circumstances. If the hon. Member has a specific case in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail's compliance with its quality of service objectives in regard to (a) Network SouthEast services and (b) the Barking to Gospel Oak service.

Mr. Freeman: My officials will meet the Network SouthEast quality control director on 30 October. I will write to my hon. Friend.

Bulk Carriers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year since 1980 to date (a) the number of bulk carrier ships that have sunk and (b) the number of crew lost; and if he will show in his answer the number of British ships and crew involved.

Mr. McLoughlin: Figures of vessels which sank, and of the number of crew lost, are not recorded. The numbers of ore/bulk/oil carriers recorded as total losses are as follows:

Year	Number
1980	21
1981	16
1982	17
1983	26
1984	17
1985	22
1986	20
1987	18
1989	12

Only one ship was United Kingdom registered—the Derbyshire which sank in September 1980 with the loss of 44 lives.

Port of London Authority

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what qualifications, other than a seagoing master's certificate, are required for masters of seagoing vessels loading ballast from land or from other vessels within the limits of the Port of London Authority and proceeding to discharge into places also within those limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In addition to a seagoing master's certificate, required for masters of seagoing vessels loading ballast from land or from other vessels within the limits of the Port of London Authority, the masters or first mates of ships over 50 m in length would require a pilotage exemption certificate if they wished to navigate their ships through the compulsory pilotage area.

Shipping Accidents

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many shipping accidents there have been in the Pentland firth in each of the last 10 years that have involved collisions, groundings and sinkings; and if he will specify the types of vessels involved.

Mr. McLoughlin: This can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

London Docklands Development Corporation

175. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those who have resigned from the employ of the London Docklands development corporation during the last three months.

Mr. Portillo: Staffing matters are for the LDDC board.

Warwickshire

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to decide on the structure plan proposals for Warwickshire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to publish his proposed modifications to the Warwickshire structure plan early next year and, having considered any objections or representations, to issue his decision on the plan by the middle of next year.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location for England and Wales the opencast coal sites currently being worked.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not held centrally by my Department. Information about the location of British Coal Corporation opencast sites currently being worked and sites worked by operators under licences issued by the corporation can be obtained from the corporation's Opencast Executive.

Homelessness

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the consultations will be completed on the revised code of guidance on housing and homeless persons under part III of the Housing Act 1985; and when the code will be issued.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the revised draft code of guidance to homelessness legislation will be published in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My officials have had a number of helpful meetings with the local authority associations about the revision of the code of guidance. We will be consulting the associations and others on a revised draft code shortly. We aim to complete the consultation process and publish a revised code early in the new year.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement listing those initiatives which he is currently undertaking or supporting which are intended to reduce the problem of homelessness in Cheshire; and if he will indicate in each case the resources allocated to these initiatives.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 October 1990]: My right hon. Friend is currently supporting the Chester lodgings and support project which seeks to increase the supply of suitable accommodation for homeless and vulnerable people in Chester. A grant of up to a maximum of £14,530 has been earmarked to be paid this financial year.

In addition, homelessness is a factor which is taken into account in determining local authorities' annual housing investment allocations.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the three locations considered by Nirex for repositories of radioactive waste accessed from an offshore structure.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has no information about any locations considered by Nirex for a radioactive waste repository accessed from an offshore structure. The Government have accepted Nirex's proposal that the repository should be in the form of a mine under the land, and site investigations are currently under way at Sellafield and Dounreay.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the monitoring his Department carries out into how local authorities are making all their property accessible to the disabled.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Local authorities when designing certain new buildings, including offices and public buildings, have a duty under the Building Regulations 1985 to make reasonable provision for access for disabled people. Elsewhere my Department does not monitor how local authorities make their property accessible to the disabled.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department gives to local planning authorities on making private and public buildings accessible to the disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Advice on the scope of planning powers is given in my Department's development control policy note No. 16, "Access for the disabled". The approved document which accompanies the Building Regulations 1985 gives practical guidance on ways to meet the requirements of part M of the regulations, which requires reasonable provision to be made to enable disabled people to gain access to relevant premises of certain new buildings.

Endangered Species

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those species of flora and of fauna which are now protected as endangered species under the terms of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, formerly the Conservation of Wild Creatures and Wild Plants Act 1975.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is contained in schedules 1, 5 and 8 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, as amended. A copy of the 1981 Act and subsequent amending orders are available in the Library of the House.

Housing Starts

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will state the number of public sector housing starts in 1978 and so far in 1990;

(2) if he will state the number of housing association starts in 1978 and so far in 1990.

Mr. Key: The latest estimates for starts by housing associations and local authorities, new towns and Government Departments, for 1980 to August 1990, appear in tables 1 and 2 of the housebuilding press release (No. 548) issued by the Department on 5 October. Corresponding figures for 1978 and 1979 appear in table 6.1 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988: Great Britain". Copies of both are in the Library.

Algal Blooms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each British region, all the sites at which evidence of eutrophication or the presence of algal blooms has been discovered this summer by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 24 October 1990]: I have asked the National Rivers Authority to send the hon. Member a list of the sites in England and Wales where blue-green algae have been identified this year.

Housing, Congleton

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes for rent have been owned by Congleton borough council in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The numbers of council-owned dwellings reported by Congleton borough council in its annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1) are as follows:

Stock at 1 April each year

	Number
1981	5,887
1982	5,653
1983	5,457

	Number
1984	5,272
1985	5,245
1986	5,046
1987	4,990
1988	4,831

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning (a) the average length of time currently taken by a local authority to re-let vacant homes and (b) the average length of time taken by the Congleton borough council to re-let vacant homes.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The 1988 survey, "Empty Local Authority Dwellings in England at 1 October and Re-lets between 1 April and 30 September 1988", showed that—at that time—the overall average re-let period for all authorities was eight weeks. The corresponding figure reported by Congleton borough council was six weeks, including vacant dwellings in modernisation programmes. A copy of the national report is in the Library.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds have been made available by his Department in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available to Congleton borough council to assist with the provision of housing for rent.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The Department makes housing investment programme (HIP) allocations to local authorities each year, which convey borrowing approval (under the new capital finance system, in the form of credit approvals). Thus housing capital expenditure is funded from borrowing, capital receipts and from revenue contributions. The Department does pay a general housing subsidy, but the costs of borrowing are only one element of this.

Within these totals it is for each local authority to decide how its resources should be spent.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the amount spent in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available by Congleton borough council on the provision of housing; what percentage of total expenditure by the authority is represented by this figure in each of those years; and what is the national average in the latest single year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 26 October 1990]: Capital expenditure by Congleton borough council on housing and all services (including housing) is as follows:

£ thousands per cent.

	Housing	All services	Housing as a percentage of all services
1981-82	1,542	2,245	69
1982-83	2,256	3.132	72
1983-84	2,760	3,378	82
1984-85	2,134	2,615	82
1985-86	2,067	2,613	79
1986-87	2,779	3,342	83
1987-88	2,964	4,014	74
1988-89	2,942	3,197	92
1989-90	3,931	4,703	84

Nationally, housing capital expenditure is provisionally estimated to be 53 per cent. of capital expenditure on all local authority services in 1989-90; the equivalent figure for non-metropolitan district councils in England is 68 per cent.

Planning Permission

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the judgment of 21 October, in the High Court on the granting of planning permission by Ealing borough council in 1987 for a mosque and town houses on the Northolt industrial site, he will bring forward proposals to amend the law relating to the restrictions of planning permission by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 26 October 1990]: I will consider the implications of this case for the planning system when I have studied the judgment.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers local authorities have to rescind planning permissions granted for the building of religious buildings and town houses on industrial estates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 26 October 1990]: Under section 97 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, if it appears to the local planning authority that it is expedient to revoke or modify any permission to develop land granted on a planning application made under part III of the Act, the authority may by order revoke or modify the permission to such extent as it considers expedient.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which company is supplying the main door drive units at RAF Mawgan; and whether extensive prototype tests have been carried out to the satisfaction of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Pursuant to the answer given by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) on 3 July at column 505, subsequent investigation has shown that the units have been assembled from a variety of components from various sources by CIMOLAI, the steelwork sub-contractor, to designs developed from the earlier prototype tests. NEUERO'S involvement was restricted to giving limited advice on request to CIMOLAI.

Church Grants

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has on the (a) number of church grants approved to date in 1990-91, (b) their value and (c) the sums remaining to be distributed in the current year;

(2) what was the total sum available for church grants in 1990-91;

(3) how many applications he has received for funds under the church grant scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Responsibility for the allocation of historic building repair grant resources to ecclesiastical buildings, and for holding data on the number of applications for such grants are matters for English Heritage. I have asked its chairman, Lord Montagu, to write to the hon. Member.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an inquiry into the leaking of information and photographs from Ford open prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: Ford prison is an open establishment which occupies a 114 acre site and has no secure boundary. It may therefore be surveyed from many points within its grounds as well as from neighbouring properties, and despite all reasonable precautions taken by the governor and the police, certain prisoners were clearly photographed recently in this way. Furthermore, as prisoners have unlimited access to the telephone it is not possible to prevent them from communicating information.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any recommendations for improved surveillance by the use of video cameras at Her Majesty's prison Kingston (Portsmouth), have been rejected on the grounds of cost during the past year.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. Closed circuit TV cameras have recently been installed at the establishment and a bid for an additional camera is currently under consideration.

Television Licences

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration is being given to providing at reduced cost television licences for pensioners where they are the sole occupiers residing in all types of housing accommodation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. We have no plans to extend the present concessions.

Private Security Industry

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the Home Office's recent report on the private security industry in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering a range of options for improving the regulation of the private security industry. When consideration of this issue has been completed, we will decide what circulation to give to the working group's report.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a regional breakdown of the increase in (a) violent crimes and (b) all crimes between 1979 and 1989 in percentage terms and also the percentage clear-up rates.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available regional information is published in table 8.1 of "Regional Trends 25", which shows the figures for 1981 and 1988. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Special Constables

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans a national campaign to encourage the recruitment of special constables.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes. A national publicity campaign will be launched early in 1991. Its purpose, over three years, is to enhance public awareness of the role and value of the special constabulary and to increase the number of special constables recruited locally.

Civil Defence Officials

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any officials specialising in civil defence protection will be attending the fifth international conference of nuclear-free zone local authorities, to be held in Glasgow on 8 to 12 November.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that there are no plans for any officials from our emergency planning division to attend.

Dog Fighting

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have been convicted of involvement in dog fighting during the last five years; how many of these have been given custodial sentences; and of the number convicted how many have been sentenced in respect of repeated offences.

Mr. John Patten: Information collected centrally does not distinguish offences relating to dog fights from other offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

"Holocaust News No. 2"

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what investigations are being conducted in respect of the publication and distribution of the publication entitled "Holocaust News No. 2".

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that inquiries are in progress.

Jamie Lloyd Stewart

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the Police Complaints Authority report on the circumstances surrounding the death of Jamie Lloyd Stewart in Holloway police station in July 1989; whether he proposes to take any further action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Police Complaints Authority is independent from both the police and the Government. It is not required to report the outcome of investigations which it supervises to the Home Secretary. However, it is understood that the investigating officer's report on the circumstances surrounding Mr. Stewart's death has been considered by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Police Complaints Authority. They have concluded that there are no grounds for taking criminal or disciplinary action against any police officers.

Prisoners (Deaths)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all deaths that have occurred in 1990 of persons detained in prison department establishments, stating in each case the age and sex of the inmate, and cause of death, the inquest verdict, whether the inmate was sentenced or on remand, the establishment where the inmate was detained, and whether the death occurred there or in an outside hospital, and where the death occurred within the prison, if he will specify if the inmate was segregated either in the hospital wing or in the punishment block.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is given in the table. Deaths occurred within the establishment unless otherwise indicated. Information about the location of the inmate at the time of death is not readily available in every case and I shall write to the hon. Member. None of the inmates located in the prison hospital at the time of death was segregated under rule 43 of the prison rules.

Betting and Gaming

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the Lloyds bank report on the future of the Tote; and whether he will publish that report.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the recommendations of the Lloyds bank report on the Tote; and if he will publish the report.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The report by Lloyds merchant bank will not be published because it was made in confidence and contains commercially and managerially sensitive information. I announced on 3 October that the Government have accepted the case for some restructuring of the Tote Board to include executive members, as recommended by Lloyds merchant bank in its report. This recommendation was independent of the issue of privatisation, on which an announcement of the Government's conclusions will be made in due course.

Sports Grounds

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the working party set up to revise the guide to safety at sports grounds in accordance with the recommendations of Lord Justice Taylor's final report into the Hillsborough disaster; and when the revised guide will be published.

Mr. John Patten: Revision of the guide to safety at sports grounds in order to reflect the relevant recommendations by the Hillsborough inquiry has progressed well. A draft of the guide was sent out for wide consultation last August. The draft has been revised in the light of comments received and has been sent to members of the working group which meets again this week. We hope to publish the revised guide very soon.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many magistrates are (a) men and (b) women.

To address the Aspen Institute and for meetings with President Bush;

28-30 August—Finland

The Prime Minister: Since 26 July I have had interesting and valuable talks with a number of heads of state, foreign politicians and heads of intergovernmental agencies. Contacts at all levels are maintained on a day-to-day basis.

Gulf Crisis

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the discussions which she has had with (a) the Secretary-General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and (b) the Secretary General of the Western European Union concerning the deployment of United Kingdom forces in the Gulf.

The Prime Minister: I saw Dr. Woerner briefly in Washington on 6 August and was able to tell him at that time of our decision to send Royal Navy ships to the Gulf. I have had no subsequent discussion with him, nor any with Dr. van Eekelen concerning the deployment of United Kingdom forces in the Gulf. United Kingdom Ministers and officials of course continue to be in close touch with both NATO and the WEU about a range of matters, including the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what response she made to the United Kingdom National Peace Council and the Fellowship of Reconciliation and Pax Christi following their submission on the Gulf situation, presented on 16 August.

The Prime Minister: We have no trace of having received the submission referred to.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of possession orders for rent arrears granted in each English region, for the years (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988 and (d) 1989.

The Attorney-General: The number of possession orders for rent arrears granted in county courts in England for the years 1986 to 1989 are as follows. The number of such orders made in the six circuits within England are also given:

The Attorney-General: There are 81 men and two women High Court judges.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General how many county court judges are (a) men and (b) women.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Attorney-General how many recorders and circuit judges are (a) men and (b) women.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is as follows:

	Men	Women

Anti-Jewish Literature

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will list all cases of prosecutions brought by the Crown prosecution service since 1986 of anti-Jewish literature which has previously been brought to his attention by hon. Members or by organisations representing the Jewish community; and what was the outcome of those prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: Fifteen prosecutions for incitement to racial hatred have been brought under section 5A of the Public Order Act 1936, or under part III of the Public Order Act 1986, in 1986 and subsequent years. Of these, 11 prosecutions included allegations that anti-Jewish material had been published or distributed. Two such cases were drawn to my attention by hon. Members but none by organisations representing the Jewish community. Proceedings have been begun, but not concluded, in a further case which was brought to my attention by an hon. Member; this case, too, involves an allegation that anti-Jewish material has been distributed. The details requested of prosecutions that have been concluded are as follows:

Name of Defendant	Result
J. Kinnon (X 2)	Convicted
J. Kinnon	Bound over
R. Trehane[1]	Convicted
D. Cullingford[1]	Convicted

J. Tyndall[1]	Convicted

M. Atkinson	Convicted

[1] Denotes a prosecution involving an allegation that anti-Jewish material was published or distributed.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration has been given by the Director of Public Prosecutions to initiating proceedings in respect of the publication entitled "Jewish Tributes to Our Child Martyrs", distributed by the Gentile Self-Defence League.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions can consider instituting criminal proceedings only once the police have placed before him evidence against an identifiable individual. The Metropolitan police, at the request of the Director of Public Prosecutions, are conducting inquiries into the publication of this leaflet but to date have been unable to identify or trace the persons responsible.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what discussions he has had with the Serious Fraud Office regarding the activities of Michael Ashcroft, chairman of ADT Ltd;

(2) whether permission has been sought by the Serious Fraud Office (a) to interview Michael Ashcroft, chairman of ADT Ltd. in Florida and (b) to seek his return for interview in the United Kingdom;

(3) what is his most up-to-date estimate of the likely completion date of the Serious Fraud Office inquiries into the activities of Michael Ashcroft, chairman of ADT Ltd.

The Attorney-General: For practical reasons of policy the Serious Fraud Office neither confirms nor corrects assertions or suggestions that it is conducting inquiries into the affairs of any individual or company. No inference as to the truth or falsity of the hon. Member's suggestion arises from adherence to that policy in this instance.

I have frequent discussions with the director of the SFO but for practical reasons of policy their contents are not divulged.

WALES

Roads

13. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total funding by central Government on roads in Wales since 1979; and how many miles of motorway and trunk roads have been built since that year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Since 1979 total net spending by central Government on motorway and trunk roads in Wales has exceeded £1·2 billion. In addition over £260 million transport grant has been provided to Welsh local authorities for improvement of their roads.

Twenty-two miles of motorway and 134 miles of trunk road have been completed. Seven schemes totalling 16 miles are currently under construction.

Sheep Farmers

14. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales to discuss the problems facing many sheep farmers in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I met representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales on 22 October to discuss the state of the industry as part of the autumn review of HLCA rates.

15. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has made to the Commission of the European Community on behalf of Welsh sheep farmers; and whether he has any plans to have direct talks with the Agriculture Commissioner on this subject in the near future.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no immediate plans to meet Mr. MacSharry. In line with long-established practice, my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food takes the lead in European Community discussions and negotiations. I know that my right hon. Friend has the interests of Welsh sheep producers clearly in mind in that context, and I am myself in regular contact with him.

Towyn Sea Wall

16. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet received a copy of the Watson Hawksley report on the effectiveness of the repairs to the Towyn sea wall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a copy of extracts from the report which include conclusions and recommendations for the reconstruction of the sea defences at Towyn.

North Wales Economy

17. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives, since 1980, his Department has taken to develop fully the potential of the north Wales economy.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Our Department has carried out a very wide range of activities to develop the potential of the north Wales economy. Details of the current initiatives and policies were set out fully in the document, "A55—The Road of Opportunity", in December 1989. The potential for developing the north Wales economy has been greatly increased by the huge improvements to road links in north Wales over the last 10 years, especially the £620 million investment in dualling the A55.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men were in employment, and how many women were in full-time employment in June 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available in (a) Wales and (b) Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. David Hunt: In June 1979 there were 618,000 male and 250,000 female employees in full-time employment in Wales. By June 1990, the latest date available, these figures were 527,000 and 273,000 respectively. County data are not available for the period requested but in June 1990 in Wales the civilian work force in employment stood at a record 1,236,000.

Housing

19. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met district council leaders in Wales to discuss housing matters, especially new house building.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the Council of Welsh Districts in September, where a range of issues were discussed including housing. The previous month I met representatives of districts at the Welsh Housing Consultative Committee where matters under discussion included housebuilding.

School Buildings

20. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if schools in Wales which elect to opt out and assume grant-maintained status will receive extra funding provision to cover the costs of repairing dilapidated buildings.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Schools in Wales which are approved for grant-maintained status will qualify for the full range of grants available under the Grant Maintained Schools (Finance) Regulations 1990. These include capital grants which can be used for the repair of premises.

Railway Halts, Gwent

21. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with British Rail concerning proposed new railway halts in Gwent.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. This is a matter for British Rail and Gwent county council.

Inward Investment

22. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on inward investment in Wales during the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: During the three years to 31 March 1990, Wales secured a total of 319 inward investment projects—a rate of about two a week. The companies involved estimated the capital investment at some £2 billion. Since March a further 61 projects have been secured with an estimated capital investment of £306 million.

Agriculture

23. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the current state of Welsh agriculture.

Mr. David Hunt: My hon. Friend the Minister of State and I have, over recent months, discussed the current state of the agriculture industry in Wales with the farming unions and other interested bodies and individuals and I am fully seized of the current problems, particularly in the livestock sector. The Government have taken a number of positive steps to help meet present concerns. Intervention support for beef is currently costing over £6 million per week in the United Kingdom. The rate of suckler cow premium has been raised in the LFA to the maximum level permitted under EC rules and the two advance payments of sheep annual premium recently announced will bring an estimated cash flow benefit of £25 million to producers in Wales.

24. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the present state of the agriculture industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am well aware of the problems currently being experienced by the agriculture industry in Wales, particularly in the livestock sector. My hon. Friend the Minister of State and I have, in recent months, had discussions with the farming unions and other interested bodies and individuals.

The Government have taken a number of positive steps to help. Intervention support for beef is currently costing over £6 million per week in the United Kingdom. The rate of suckler cow premium has been raised in the LFA to the maximum level permitted under EC rules and the two advance payments of sheep annual premium recently announced will bring an estimated cash flow benefit of £25 million to producers in Wales.

Community Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the programme he intends to follow in providing additional finances to local authorities in Wales (a) in the present financial year, (b) in the 1991-92 financial year and (c) in subsequent financial years in order to ensure adequate availability of appropriate housing to match the requirements of his programme for the implementation of care in the community.

Mr. Grist: Allocations and guidance for the current year have already been made available. Decisions on expenditure priorities for 1991-92 and subsequent years will be finalised during the next few weeks and will be announced as soon as possible.

Roads, North Wales

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a report on progress on modernising the road network in north Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Excellent progress has been made to date on upgrading the A55 between Chester and Bangor to dual carriageway standard; 51 miles are complete, 7·6 miles are under construction, and only one scheme, the Aber improvement, remains in the forward programme. With the completion of the Chirk bypass early next year, the upgrading of the 16 miles of the A483 in Clwyd will be completed.

Health Service Property Maintenance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date the current maintenance backlog on national health service properties will be cleared on current and planned capital spending for the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 31 October 1989 at columns 108-9.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of backlog maintenance for national health service properties in Wales, and by health authority, for the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: District health authorities in Wales are required to review the cost of backlog maintenance annually and for 1989-90, they estimated that it would cost £163·4 million to bring the whole of the NHS estate in Wales to a standard where it is exhibiting only minor deterioration. This sum may be broken down by district health authority as follows:

DHA	£ Million
Clwyd	21·5
East Dyfed	15·0
Gwent	14·1
Gwynedd	10·2
Mid Glamorgan	36·9
Pembrokeshire	0·6
Powys	3·3
South Glamorgan	51·0
West Glamorgan	10·8

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Least-developed Countries

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution was made by Her Majesty's Government to the second United Nations conference on the least-developed countries held in Paris on 3 to 14 September; what communications were developed with non-governmental organisations in attendance; whether a copy of the booklet, "The LDCs in the 1990s: Development or Oblivion", on the non-governmental organisations' views on the new programme of action was provided to the United Kingdom delegation; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the least-developed countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government welcome the outcome of the second United Nations conference on the least developed held in Paris from 3-14 September and will support those least-developed countries which implement the policies outlined in the programme of action.

The British delegation to the conference was led by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. The delegation played an active and positive role in the negotiations for the programme of action for the 1990s adopted by the conference. Two new British initiatives relating to aid tying and local costs rules, which will be of direct benefit to the least-developed countries, were announced at the conference. The delegation kept in close contact with British non-governmental organisations, both before and during the conference. The booklet "The LDCs in the 1990s: Development or Oblivion" was also taken into account in formulating the United Kingdom position on the various issues.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what indication he has received from the European Commission as to the county chosen as the site for the European bank for reconstruction and development.

Mrs. Chalker: Prospective member countries of the European bank for reconstruction and development decided last May that London should be the site of the bank's headquarters.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made in choosing a potential site for the European bank for reconstruction and development.

Mrs. Chalker: The bank has temporary headquarters in the City of London. Negotiations on a permanent location in London are in progress.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many jobs he forecasts will be attached to the new European bank for reconstruction and development.

Mrs. Chalker: The president-designate of the bank, M. Jacques Attali, has stated that by the end of its first year of operations the bank expects to employ roughly 200 to 250 people.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss sites for the European bank for reconstruction and development with the Kirklees metropolitan borough council.

Mrs. Chalker: None—the bank's headquarters will be in London.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service (Wales)

53. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review recruitment, training and promotion procedures within the civil service in Wales to ensure that all those wishing to pursue a career within the civil service can do so within Wales, without prejudicing their career prospects.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend keeps all aspects of the staffing of the civil service under review.

Historic Houses

Mr. Lee: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many maintenance funds there are for historic properties; and how many of these are for £100,000 or less.

Mr. Maude: A total number of 70 heritage maintenance funds have been established. It is not possible to provide a figure for the value of property held by heritage maintenance funds.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of value added tax received from listed building repairs each year over the last five years.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested is not available.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of adjusting the maximum ceiling for mortgage interest tax relief to (a) £35,000, (b) £40,000, (c) £45,000 and (d) £50,000 on the assumption that (i) relief continues to be available at the higher marginal tax rate where applicable and (ii) that relief is restricted to the standard 25 per cent. rate of income tax.

Mr. Maude: Provisional estimates of the costs of increasing the ceiling are given in the table. The estimates exclude behavioural effects which would be substantial for the higher ceilings.

Direct revenue costs at 1990-91 income levels of raising the ceiling for mortgage interest relief

Ceiling £	Relief at marginal tax rate £ million	Relief at basic rate of 25 per cent. £ million

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of manufacturing investment made in each year since 1979 by (a) foreign direct investors and (b) indigenous manufacturers in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales; and what percentage annual changes these figures represent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following table provides the available information. Current price figures have been supplied because there are no regional price deflators. Data for 1980 can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Incomes

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average wage gap in male average weekly earnings between Scotland and the south-east in (a) 1979 and (b) 1989 in current prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Data by region for average gross weekly pay in April of each year for adult males in full-time employment are available in table 12 part A of the annual new earnings survey reports. Information on the RPI to convert the figures to 1990 prices is published in table 6.4 of the Employment Gazette and in table 26 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends.

Manufacturing Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish indices for (a) industrial production and (b) manufacturing output for (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) the United Kingdom and (iv) the south-east from 1979 to the most recent available date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: (i) For Scotland, annual indices for industrial production and for manufacturing output from 1979 to 1989 were last published in the "Scottish Economic Bulletin" No. 41, June 1990. More recent quarterly figures are published in the Scottish index of production and construction quarterly press notice.

(ii) For Wales, annual indices for industrial production and for manufacturing output from 1979 to 1987 are given in the table. More recent annual and quarterly figures are published in the Welsh index of production and construction quarterly press notice.

(iii) For the United Kingdom, indices can be found on the CSO database, which is accessible through the House of Commons Library.

(iv) Regional indices of production for England are not compiled.

Benefit in Kind

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to increase the threshold for benefit in kind above the current limit of £8,500 a year; how this limit has changed in real value over the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [holding answer 25 October 1990]: There are no plans to increase the threshold at which special rules apply to the taxation of benefits in kind. In principle all employees should pay income tax on the whole of their earnings whether received in cash or in kind. If this threshold had been indexed over the last 10 years in line with inflation according to the statutory formula for increasing personal allowances and thresholds, the threshold in 1990-91 would be £16,636.

Petroleum Products

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value added tax paid on petroleum products, monthly, from August 1989 to September 1990.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 26 October 1990]: Monthly estimates of value added tax paid on petroleum products are not available. However, estimates of value added tax on these products accruing on private consumption can be calculated quarterly and are:

	£ million
Quarter 3	300
1990
Quarter 1	290
Quarter 2	310

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 October 1990]: As the information requested is lengthy, I will write to the right hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

ENERGY

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last released financial aid for research into cleaner coal-fired power stations; and when he will be releasing further aid for research into this subject.

Mr. Baldry: On 16 July my Department announced details of a £2·5 million research package for the development of clean coal technologies. The package covered three projects—the design of high temperature high pressure filters for advanced clean coal technologies (for example, pressurised fluidised bed combustion combined cycle and integrated gasification combined cycle systems); research into reducing nitrogen oxide emissions; and modifying combustion processes to reduce harmful emissions contributing to acid rain. My Department's contribution to these projects will be £1·2 million. A copy of the press notice for this announcement is in the Libraries of the House.

A number of further possible clean coal technology projects are being worked up in collaboration with United Kingdom industry, the European Commission and the International Energy Agency.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the total cost of electricity privatisation and the cost of all promotional and of all advisory activity concerned with this privatisation (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas.

Mr. Baldry: It is too early to make any meaningful estimate of the likely gross costs of privatising the electricity supply industry but the costs will be small in comparison to the proceeds.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps have been taken to assess how ex gratia payments in settlement of breach of copyright claims may be avoided in future, in the light of the payment made to Universal Studios relating to the electricity privatisation advertising campaign.

Mr. Baldry: The responsibility for copyright issues lies with the advertising agency. Her Majesty's Government agreed to pay £6,000 as a licence fee in respect of the use of the characters in the flotation advertising campaign, as is normal in such circumstances.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what advice he obtained from copyright lawyers concerning the payment to Universal Studios for unauthorised use of the copyright design of Herman Munster in the electricity privatisation commercials;

(2) how many outside bodies or companies he consulted before the decision was made to settle out of court the breach of copyright claim by Universal Studios regarding Frank N. Stein and Herman Munster.

Mr. Baldry: Any responsibility for this matter lay with the advertising agency. Her Majesty's Government consulted with their advisers to clarify their position on this matter.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the first approach was made by Universal Studios regarding the alleged breach of contract arising from the similarity between the character Frank N. Stein in the electricity privatisation advertising campaign and the character Herman Munster of "The Munsters"; and on what date he made his decision to settle the claim out of court.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter between the advertising agency WCRS, and MCA Merchandising Corporation of America, acting on behalf of Universal City Studios Inc.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost of (a) the settlement of the alleged breach of copyright claim by Universal Studios over the Frank N . Stein figure used in the electricity privatisation commercials and (b) the legal and other advice used in responding to Universal Studios' claim.

Mr. Baldry: (a) is a matter between the advertising agency and MCA Merchandising Corporation of America, on behalf of Universal City Studios Inc. With regard to (b), responsibility on this matter lies with the advertising agency. Her Majesty's Government consulted with their marketing and legal advisers to clarify their position on this matter. The cost of this advice is commercially confidential, but was a minimal amount.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will make a deduction from the fees agreed to be paid to the WCRS advertising agency equivalent to the cost of the out-of-court settlement with Universal Studios for alleged breach of copyright.

Mr. Baldry: Her Majesty's Government have made no payment in respect of any alleged breach of copyright by WCRS.

National Power (Coal Supplies)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what advice he has received from the European Commission regarding the claim by the Small Mines

Association of south Wales relating to the differential in prices paid by National Power for coal supplies to Aberthaw and Uskmouth power stations;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the claim by the Small Mines Association of south Wales for redress over discriminatory pricing for coal deliveries to National Power stations; what action he now proposes; and at what estimated cost;

(3) when he expects to complete his discussions with the South Wales Small Mines Association and National Power regarding the dispute over discriminatory pricing in coal deliveries to Uskmouth and Aberthaw power stations;

(4) what actions he proposes to take in response to the claim for redress for discriminatory coal pricing made by the South Wales Small Mines Association;

(5) if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from John Temple Laing of the European Commission to the office of the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Communities dated 28 August, responding to the claim for redress for unfair coal pricing submitted by the South Wales Small Mines Association.

Mr. Baldry: The South Wales Small Mines Association has made a complaint to the European Commission about the terms on which its members have been able to sell their output. My Department has been actively encouraging the parties to the dispute to achieve a negotiated settlement. The association is currently considering the proposals most recently offered. The European Commission has supported our efforts to achieve a negotiated settlement. It has been the policy of successive Governments to treat correspondence with the Commission as confidential.

Reprocessing Plant, Sellafield

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received about the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Baldry: I receive correspondence covering a wide range of energy topics including matters relating to British Nuclear Fuels' operations at Sellafield.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Leicester Offices (Refurbishment)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the cost of the refurbishments at his Department's offices in Leicester and the way the expenditure is to be incurred.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The only major refurbishment in Leicester is planned at Yeoman street office. We have a general programme for refurbishing offices over a period of years, which has now been implemented in many local offices and which has substantially improved the facilities and service for the public and enhanced the working areas for staff. The Yeoman street office was due for improvements under this programme and the opportunity is being taken to pilot there a new corporate image for our offices. Work is due to start in November, at an estimated cost of £625,000 in total.

Incomes

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown by standard United Kingdom region of the percentage of households in each of the following weekly income groups: (a) under £60, (b) under £80 and (c) under £100 on the most recently available figures.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to table 27 on page 76 of the family expenditure survey 1987-88, copies of which are available in the Library.

Benefit Payments, Leeds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables, using the assumptions in his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden), on 22 June 1988, Official Report, columns 571-76, but using expenditure and benefit figures appropriate for families in Leeds, together with a column showing the extent of the differences resulting from the April 1988 social security changes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: These tables are no longer published, for the reasons given in my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 23 February at columns 937-38.

Residential Care

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he proposes to make in the regulations governing entitlement to housing benefit for people in residential care and nursing homes.

Mr. Scott: The income support scheme contains special provisions related to the fees and other expenses paid by people in residential care and nursing homes. The income support limits established under these provisions, unlike other income support rates, take account of accommodation costs as well as other day-to-day living expenses. They are also set to take account of care costs. These arrangements will continue until the introduction of a new framework for funding community care, now planned for 1993.

Current regulations nevertheless also allow access to housing benefit in such cases. This was intended to assist those in residential care and nursing homes who are unable to claim the special rates of income support—principally disabled people who are in full-time work, or people living in a home run by a close relative. In recent months, however, a number of claims have come forward which go well beyond this limited purpose, and effectively establish housing benefit as an alternative to income support.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his uprating statement on 24 October at columns 348-66, this is neither sensible nor appropriate, and in the light of the substantial increases in the income support limits which we then announced, we therefore proposed to consult on amendments to re-establish the policy intention more clearly.

We will shortly be sending to the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations, and I am today placing in the Library, draft regulations to this end. They provide that those living in registered residential care and nursing homes should not generally have access to housing benefit, while preserving that access for those who are excluded from the special rates of income support because they are in full-time work or living in a home run by a close relative. Underlying entitlement to housing benefit will, however, be preserved for all those at present living in a registered residential care or nursing home who have successfully claimed housing benefit, and for those who have, on or before today, submitted a claim which is subsequently determined in their favour. In these cases, housing benefit will continue in payment and will be increased as and when appropriate under the current rules, thus fully protecting their position.

Subject to the consultation with the Social Security Advisory Committee and the local authority associations, we intend to bring forward regulations later this year to give effect to these changes from January 1991.

War Pensions

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Mr. Edward Nutall, reference M2/912642, applied for a war pension; and what are the reasons for the delay in dealing with his claim.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Mr. Nutall applied for a war pension on 11 August 1989. A consultant's report is required before a decision can be made and everything possible is being done to secure an early appointment. If a war pension is awarded it will, of course, commence from the date of claim.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higher Education

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many persons aged 17 and 19 years, respectively, per thousand are in full-time education in England, Scotland and Britain's major economic competitors.

Mr. Eggar: The readily available information is shown in the table. Data are unavailable for 19-year-olds on this basis. The figures for Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Teacher Training

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will make it his policy to give every teacher and head teacher with at least 25 years' direct experience the opportunity of a short period teaching student teachers in establishments of teacher training; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to consider the introduction of an automatic period teaching student teachers in an establishment of teacher training, for every teacher having completed at least five years' full-time classroom experience; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The Government's criteria for the approval of initial teacher training courses already require institutions to ensure that experienced serving teachers are involved in the planning and evaluation of courses, the selection of students, supervision and assessment of students' practical work and contributions as appropriate to lectures, seminars and other course activities.

It is the responsibility of schools, local authorities, and teacher training institutions to negotiate arrangements which will be of maximum benefit both to students and serving teachers.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the uptake of vacancies of teacher training establishments for the current term; and what were the comparable figures for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Fallon: The total annual intake to initial teacher training in England and Wales since 1983 is as follows:

	Intake
1983	16,218
1984	16,707
1985	16,725
1986	16,889
1987	19,180
1988	20,183
1989	21,757

Comparable data for the years before 1983 are not available.

Data on recruitment to teacher training institutions in the current academic year are in the process of being collected and will be available later on in the term.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to allow all schools' boards of governors to negotiate individual salaries with individual teachers up to a maximum of 50 per cent. above the present rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The governors of schools with delegated budgets already exercise control over the award of incentive allowances, and other pay discretions. The interim advisory committee's recommendations for 1990-91, which are being implemented in full by January 1991, will mean greater flexibility to target resources, tackle local recruitment and retention problems, improve career prospects and reward responsibility and good performance. The remit which my right hon. Friend gave to the committee on 14 September asks the committee to consider what further modifications should be made to the system of selective payments in 1991-92.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost to the Exchequer of increasing teachers' salaries by 50 per cent. over the next two years.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of such an increase would depend on several factors, including the number of teachers employed and the proportion on each point of the pay scale. But estimated spending by LEAs in England on teachers in 1990-91 is some £8 billion. So as a broad order of magnitude, a 50 per cent. increase might cost some £4 billion. The Exchequer contribution to this through revenue support grant cannot be separately identified.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evaluation his Department has made of the proposals made by the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers for a pay review body for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: NASUWT's proposals for a pay review body for teachers were not widely supported during my right hon. Friend's consultations earlier this year on new pay machinery for teachers. Most of those consulted favoured the restoration of negotiating rights for teachers. That is what we have now proposed.

Education Spending

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing spending on primary and secondary education in total and per child in 1980-81 and in the last year for which figures are available, inflation adjusted.

Mr. Fallon: The available data are as follows:

	1980-81 £	1988-89 £
Nursery and primary
Total school-based spending:
cash terms:	2,300 million	4,200 million
1988-89 prices:	3,650 million	4,200 million

cash terms:	650	1,360
1988-89 prices:	1,035	1,360

Notes to table:

1. The figures relate to net recurrent spending in nursery, primary and secondary schools. They do not include central services provided by local education authorities such as administration, inspection and transport, or capital spending. Nor do they cover special schools.
2. The figures are drawn from LEA returns of expenditure to the Department of the Environment and returns of pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science.
3. The 1980-81 cash figures are converted to 1988-89 prices using current gross domestic product (market prices) deflators.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the percentages of gross domestic product spent on primary and secondary education in each European Community member state in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The data are available for public expenditure only and are shown in the table.

Glynn Research Institute

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet Dr. Peter Mitchell of the Glynn Research Institute in Cornwall to discuss the funding of new scientific projects at the institute.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Up to four members of the AFRC are appointed by the Minsiter of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and up to two members by the Secretary of State for Scotland. With the exception of SERC, their length of office is not specified.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the members of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, the date of their original appointment and the date on which their current term of office will end.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Advisory Board for the Research Councils was reconstituted on 1 April 1990. Its current membership is as follows:

Members	Date of appointment	Date term of office ends
Professor Sir David Phillips (Chairman)	January 1983[1]	March 1993

[1] Date of appointment to the "old" ABRC prior to reconstitution.

The following are ex-officio members:

Heads of Research Councils

Professor J. L. Knill Chairman, Natural Environment Research Council
Sir Mark Richmond Chairman, Science and Engineering Research Council (from October 1990)
Professor H. J. Newby Chairman, Economic and Social Research Council
Dr. D. A. Rees Secretary, Medical Research Council
Dr. B. Jamieson Acting Secretary, Agricultural and Food Research Council (from October 1990)

Assessors

Professor W. D. P. Stewart Chief Scientific Adviser, Cabinet Office (from October 1990)
Mr. J. M. M. Vereker Deputy Secretary, Department of Education and Science

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the prescribed minimum and maximum number of members of (i) the Medical Research Council, (ii) the Science and Engineering Research Council, (iii) the Economic and Social Research Council, (iv) the Natural Environment Research Council, (v) the Agricultural and Food Research Council and (vi) the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The maximum and minimum numbers of members of the research councils are prescribed in their charters, as follows:

	Minimum number of members	Maximum number of members
AFRC	20	23
ESRC	14	20
MRC	16	20
NERC	14	20
SERC	15	19

There is no prescribed minimum or maximum for the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, which is an advisory body. As currently constituted, the board has 14 members (an independent chairman, six independent members, the heads of the five research councils and two assessors).

Head Teachers

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many state sector primary schools in England and Wales had a male head teacher and how many had a female head teacher in the school year 1988-89;

(2) how many state sector secondary schools in England and Wales had a male head teacher and how many had a female head teacher in the school year 1988-89, divided between schools with students of 11 to 16 years and those 11 to 18 years.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested for maintained primary and secondary schools in England for January 1989 is as follows:

	Schools with a male head teacher	Schools with a female head teacher
Primary[1]	10,162	9,067
Secondary
11-16[2]	1,218	213
11-18[3]	1,679	388

[1] Includes middle schools deemed primary.
[2] Includes secondary modern schools, but excludes middle schools deemed secondary.
[3] Includes grammar, technical schools and sixth form colleges.

Similar information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in the school years 1988 to 1989 and 1989 to 1990, how many (a) male and (b) female head teachers of primary and secondary schools in England and Wales left the profession for each of the following reasons: (i) normal retirement, (ii) early retirement and (iii) death in service.

Mr. Fallon: Information is not yet available for the dates specified.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action is being taken by his Department to follow up the policy statement on the education of deaf-blind children.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has undertaken a consultation exercise of local education authorities following the policy statement on the education of deaf-blind children. We are also proposing a joint seminar with SENSE early in 1991 to disseminate the results of the consultation exercise.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what services are available to deaf-blind students in higher education.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As autonomous bodies higher education institutions are responsible for determining what provision to make to meet the needs of students with disabilities. This is not monitored centrally. Students can obtain services individually in the light of their needs with the assistance of the disabled students allowances.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had from local education authorities to his policy statement on the education of deaf-blind children.

Mr. Alan Howarth: To date, the Department has received 52 responses from local education authorities to the consultation exercise on the policy statement on the education of deaf-blind children.

Special Schools

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the report of the feasibility study into the extension of local management of schools to special schools.

Mr. Fallon: The report has been published today. It concludes that the extension of LMS to special schools is both feasible and desirable. The report found that LMS would bring benefits to special schools and their pupils. Copies of the report are being sent to local education authorities and to special schools in both England and Wales. My right hon. Friend will shortly be consulting LEAs and schools on the report's findings. In the light of their views, the Government will consider making the necessary enabling regulations to permit LEAs to extend LMS to their special schools.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Language Learning

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that young people have an effective grounding in modern foreign language.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what importance he places on language learning.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to the reply, 23 October 1990, c. 159-60.]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I are publishing tomorrow our proposals for attainment targets and programmes of study for modern foreign languages in the national curriculum. Our proposals are based on the recommendations of the working group for modern foreign languages, and will be published with the group's final report. Copies of the published document will be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Education Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total capital expenditure on schools in Scotland in each year since 1978 in real terms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the following table which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. The reduction in expenditure in real terms during the period reflects a substantial and progressive decline in pupil numbers which in turn reduced the requirement for new school building.

Capital expenditure by local authorities on schools

Year	£ million at 1988-89 prices
1978-79	114·260
1979-80	89·576
1980-81	83·169
1981-82	87·486
1982-83	70·754
1983-84	58·204
1984-85	56·680
1985-86	59·838
1986-87	52·489
1987-88	51·697
1988-89	59·392
1989-90[1]	60·519

[1] Provisional.

The figures include expenditure on nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.

Outturn figures have been converted to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator.

British Rail

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, Official Report, 19 October, column 945 (a) when he last discussed with Sir Bob Reid the improvement of the British Rail services between Glasgow and London and (b) what timetable was discussed for such improvements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: British Rail's plans for the upgrading of the west coast main line between Glasgow and London are likely to be one of the subjects discussed when my right hon. and learned Friend next meets the chairman of British Rail. The timing of individual projects is however a matter for British Rail to determine in the light of other competing investment priorities and the resources at its disposal.

Moray Adventurer

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations are being undertaken by his Department into events on 4 October involving the Buckie-registered vessel Moray Adventurer approximately 15 miles south-east of Peterhead.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The matter has not been reported formally to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. Officers of DAFS sea fisheries inspectorate are seeking to establish with the skipper of the fishing vessel concerned the facts surrounding the incident.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply on radioactive waste to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 22 October, column 73, he will list any other sites in Scotland under investigation for a deep repository.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: UK Nirex Ltd. is not investigating any sites in Scotland apart from Dounreay.

Mr. James Wilby

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what period Mr. James Wilby was employed by the Scottish Office; what was the period of his contract; and why it was terminated.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no record of a Mr. James Wilby having been employed by the Scottish Office. If the hon. Member is referring to Mr. John Wilby, the former director of the Scottish ambulance service, his employment was with the Common Services Agency from 1 November 1985 until 31 July 1990 when he resigned to take up the appointment of managing director to the London ambulance service.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether, as a condition of granting the supervisory status to accountancy bodies, he will require that the minutes of their policy-making committees be available to any member of the public;

(2) whether, as a condition of the supervisory status, he will require the councils of the accountancy bodies to meet in the open;

(3) whether, as a condition of granting the supervisory status to accountancy bodies, he will require that the minutes of the council meetings be available to all members of that body.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State has no power to impose such conditions. His function is to determine whether applications for recognition meet the criteria laid down in the Companies Act 1989. In any case, the publicity to be given to meetings of this kind is a matter for the bodies themselves.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to introduce legislation to require any accountancy firm auditing a public limited company to file information with a designated authority.

Mr. Redwood: We have no such plans. However, I expect that the applications for recognition from supervisory bodies for auditors under the Companies Act 1989 will include requirements as to the filing of information with them by audit firms.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, as a condition of granting the supervisory status to accountancy bodies, he will require that the minutes of their policy-making committees be available to all members.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State has no power to impose such a condition. His function is to determine whether applications for recognition meet the criteria laid down in the companies Act 1989. In any case, the question of whether minutes of its policy-making committees should be made available to all its members is one for the body itself to decide.

Student Complaints

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to amend the Companies Acts to require the qualifying bodies to create an independent ombudsman to hear student complaints.

Mr. Redwood: No. But it is open to a body itself to set up an independent ombudsman to hear student complaints.

Audit Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will exercise his powers under part II of the Companies Act 1989 to create an independent statutory body to regulate auditing.

Mr. Redwood: As the Government made clear during the passage of the Companies Bill, we have no present intention to do so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will create a body equivalent to OFGAS and OFTEL to regulate auditing.

Mr. Redwood: No. Under section 46 of the Companies Act 1989 the Secretary of State may establish a body corporate to exercise his functions under part II of that Act. However, we have no present intention of exercising this power.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, before granting supervisory status to any organisation, he will ask it to explain its record on nominating women to major policy-making organisations.

Mr. Redwood: No. While the Government would favour the nomination of more women to major organisations, the record of a supervisory body in this respect is of no relevance to a decision by the Secretary of State on whether to recognise the body under the procedures in part II of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take powers to provide that each supervisory body has lay observers on its council.

Mr. Redwood: We have no such plans.

Company Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to introduce legislation to define the meaning of auditor independence.

Mr. Redwood: Section 27 of the Companies Act 1989 (which we expect to bring into force early next year) sets out connections between a person and a company which render the person ineligible for appointment as auditor to the company on the grounds of a lack of independence. The Secretary of State will consider whether to exercise the power in section 27(2) to specify by regulations further disqualifying connections once it is clear what professional rules and guidance there will be governing the independence of auditors. Under the 1989 Act the Secretary of State cannot recognise a supervisory body for auditors unless it appears to him to have adequate rules and practices in respect of professional integrity and independence.

Company Acquisitions (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions have been undertaken involving the use of section 151 of the Companies Act 1985; how many of such charges were subsequently dropped; and how many were ultimately successful.

Mr. Redwood: To the Department's knowledge 19 charges have been brought under section 151 of the Companies Act 1985. In respect of six of these the judge ordered the jury not to bring verdicts and they were left on the file. The other charges have not yet come to trial.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to review section 151 of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: I have received representations concerning section 151 and am considering them.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to place before Parliament his proposals for implementing the EC directive on insider dealing.

Mr. Redwood: The Government said in their reply to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry's report on company investigations that they would bring forward legislation to implement the EC directive on insider dealing as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Polly Peck Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about recent developments at Polly Peck Ltd. and Del Monte.

Mr. Redwood: No representations about Polly Peck plc have been received since I wrote to the company on 25 September 1990.

However, in view of recent developments my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has said that he will look at all the information available to him arising from the move into administration of Polly Peck and the events leading up to it. In particular he has told the administrators that he will want to hear from them at the earliest opportunity whether they think there are any matters that need investigating which require the use of the Secretary of State's powers under the Companies Acts, bearing in mind the investigation being undertaken by the Serious Fraud Office.

No separate representations have been received about Del Monte.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure that the Financial Reporting Council conducts its proceedings in public.

Mr. Redwood: The procedural arrangements of the Financial Reporting Council are a matter for the council to decide. I am sure that the council is fully conscious of the need to maximise public understanding and awareness of its work.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many former civil servants from his Department joined General Electric Company, Plessey, Northern Engineering Industries, BICC, or Trafalgar after leaving the civil service since May 1979.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 24 October 1990]: The Department of Trade and Industry has existed in its present form only since 1983. Separate Departments of Trade and Industry existed between 1979 and 1983. Totals for DTI, and these predecessor Departments since 1979 are as follows:

	Total
To General Electric	5
To Plessey	0
To Northern Engineering Industries	2
To BICC	0
To Trafalgar House	0

Such figures would not, of course, include any staff who, once having left the Department and having passed the two-year notification period, then joined one of these companies.

Young People (Complaints)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will specify what formal procedures for making complaints and representations, specifying where appropriate under which sections of which Acts, are available locally and nationally to children and young people under 18 years of age who wish to make complaints about matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 October 1990]: Any member of the public can make complaints or representations to the Department about matters falling within its responsibilities. There are no formal procedures for doing so.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the estimate of spending by overseas visitors for each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: The information is published in table 8.2 of the October 1990 issue of Employment Gazette.

Small Firms Service

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were dealt with by the small firms service in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: In 1989-90 the small firms service in England dealt with 317,529 inquiries.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by region, how many inspectors there are in the nuclear installations inspectorate; what is the required manning establishment; how many are in post; and if he will make a statement as to what their terms of reference are.

Mr. Forth: The principal aim of HSE's nuclear installations inspectorate (NII) is to ensure a safe operating regime for civil nuclear installations through programmes of inspection of licensed sites, assessing safety cases provided by licensees, and seeing that appropriate safety standards are developed and maintained by licensees.

The NII is not regionally structured, but based in HSE's Bootle and London headquarters. On 1 October 1990, 160 inspectors were in post in the inspectorate, an increase of some 60 per cent. since 1987. Current plans are to recruit to a level of 172 inspectors.

Legionella

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he had with the Health and Safety Executive regarding the occurrence of legionella in power station cooling towers.

Mr. Forth: None. The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) intends to take statutory action to strengthen existing legislation and guidance applying to the control of legionellosis. The HSC issued a consultative document in November 1989 setting out its proposals. In the light of comments received revised proposals for action have been drawn up and will be considered shortly by the HSC. Existing requirements under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 apply to all wet cooling towers, including those at power stations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent the question of human rights in Sri Lanka has been discussed in the context of aid negotiations with that country's Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have on a number of occasions raised the question of human rights in the context of aid negotiations with the Sri Lanka Government, notably at meetings of the World bank-led aid group.

At the latest meeting of the aid group held in Paris on 25 October, the United Kingdom delegation, in common with other donors, made it clear that human rights performance was one of the factors to be taken into account in future decisions on aid.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his most recent discussions with European Community Foreign Ministers on the subject of human rights in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: EC member states have considered this question on several occasions in recent months. Our most recent consideration resulted in a demarche by EC heads of mission in Colombo on 19 October and a statement by the EC presidency at the aid consortium meeting in Paris on 25 October, in which the Community and its member states urged the Sri Lankan Government to observe their international obligations in the field of human rights.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his most recent discussions with the Government of Sri Lanka on the subject of human rights and alleged violations thereof by officials of that Government and the Indian peacekeeping force in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have had no discussions with the Sri Lankan Government about violations of human rights by the Indian peacekeeping force, which withdrew from Sri Lanka in March.

Our high commissioner in Colombo has raised our concerns about human rights abuses by Sri Lankan Government agencies with the President directly, and with his Ministers on many occasions.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will attend the Sri Lankan aid consortium meeting in Paris; and if United Kingdom representatives will express formal concern at breaches of human rights by Sri Lankan Government security forces.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We were represented at the aid consortium meeting in Paris on 25 October by officials from the ODA. We have regularly voiced our concerns about human rights abuses by the Sri Lankan Government and on this occasion the British delegation, in common with other donors, made it clear that human rights performance was one of the factors to be taken into account in future decisions on aid.

Yosif Dimant

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Soviet Government about their failure to grant an exit visa to Yosif Dimant, of Chernovtsy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will add Mr. Dimant's case to the list of those which we raise regularly with the Soviet authorities. We shall continue to press the Soviet authorities until all such cases are satisfactorily resolved.

Diplomatic Relations

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those members of the United Nations with which the United Kingdom does not have diplomatic relations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following are those members of the United Nations with which the United Kingdom does not have diplomatic relations:

Albania

Bhutan

Cambodia

Libya

Syria

Nepal

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representation to the Government of the Kingdom of Nepal concerning the introduction of a secular state and freedom of religion with regard to its forthcoming new constitution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes. Her Majesty's ambassador in Kathmandu has expressed our concerns on these points on several occasions including to the Prime Minister of Nepal on 20 September.

COCOM Proscribed Destinations

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with his COCOM colleagues the extension of proscribed destinations and items to include Iraq and Libya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The COCOM controls were designed to counter the strategic security threat from communist countries. Their purpose is to control the export of goods and technology that would otherwise enhance the threat that still exists. The list of proscribed destinations agreed amongst COCOM partners is based on that strategic threat. The controls reflect the indigenous capabilities of those countries.

Exports are controlled to other destinations for other reasons. Iraq and Libya are prohibited destinations listed in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989, as amended, for the export of certain goods and technology.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether acceptance as a full member of the Council of Europe qualifies a state for removal from the COCOM list of proscribed destinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The list of destinations proscribed by COCOM comprise those countries that pose a threat to western strategic security interests, or countries whose military and intelligence links with the former are inimical to those interests.

COCOM members are considering a special procedure to facilitate the licensing of certain exports to Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. This will be dependent on their adopting adequate export control systems together with a commitment to ensure that imported strategic goods and technologies are devoted exclusively to civilian purposes.

Middle East

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all resolutions passed by the United Nations Security Council since 2 August on middle east affairs; which of these were initiated by the United Kingdom; and how the United Kingdom ambassador voted on each resolution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Security Council has passed 11 resolutions on the middle east since 2 August. The United Kingdom voted for them all, and was closely involved with each initiative, either as a permanent member of the Security Council or as president of the Security Council for the month of October.

Resolution No.	Subject
SCR 660 (adopted 2 August)	Condemned invasion and called for immediate and unconditional Iraqi withdrawal.
SCR 661 (6 August)	Imposed sanctions.
SCR 662 (9 August)	Decided annexation of Kuwait by Iraq null and void.
SCR 664 (18 August)	Reaffirmed rights of third state nationals, including the right to leave.
SCR 665 (25 August)	Authorised measures to halt shipping in order to inspect and verify cargoes.

SCR 670 (25 September)	Measures to tighten air embargo and detain or deny entry to Iraqi-registered ships.
SCR 672 (12 October)	Condemning acts of violence by Israeli Security Forces at the Temple Mount on 8 October, calling on Israel to abide by the Fourth Geneva Convention, and requesting the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the mission he had decided to send to the region.
SCR 673 (24 October)	Calling on Israel to accept the Secretary-General's Mission.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards recognising the right of the Palestinian people to opt for a Palestinian state; and as to what extent this should depend on the agreement of the Israeli Government provided that in such negotiations Israel has been offered borders which Her Majesty's Government consider satisfy that country's reasonable demands for security.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have always supported the Palestinians' legitimate right to self-determination. We also support Israel's right to exist within secure borders. A settlement of the Palestinian problem should be on this basis. Whether it will include a Palestinian state is a matter for resolution between the parties.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all United Nations resolutions passed since 1970 on deaths of civilians in Northern Ireland; and how the United Kingdom voted on each resolution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No resolutions of this nature have been passed in the United Nations.

Fuel Air Explosives

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during the next meeting of the European Community Foreign Affairs Council, he will raise with his Spanish counterpart the sale of fuel air explosives from the Spanish company M. S. Systems of Madrid, via a third party in Chile, to Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in constant touch with European and other Governments to exchange information about the practical implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 661.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent visit to Egypt and the middle east, he discussed the proliferation of nuclear weapons in the Gulf region.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised the matter of human rights and political prisoners with Ministers or officials of the Turkish Government.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Turkey's human rights performance is regularly discussed between members of Her Majesty's embassy in Ankara and officials in the Turkish Foreign Ministry. At ministerial level, the subject was most recently raised by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs during a visit to Ankara on 20 June.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom officials will represent Her Majesty's Government at the amendment conference to the 1963 partial nuclear test ban treaty, to be held in New York in January next year; and if his Department has had any consultation with interested non-governmental organisations over prospects for this conference.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: United Kingdom official representation at the partial test ban treaty amendment conference has not yet been decided. We anticipate that it will be drawn from officials serving at our missions to the United Nations conference on disarmament at Geneva and to the United Nations in New York. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office discussed prospects for the conference at the most recent of meetings with non-governmental organisations on 23 October.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each outstanding technical verification problem requiring resolution prior to the achievement of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty; and what resources in terms of committed scientific expertise and financial support have been expended by Her Majesty's Government since 1980 on the problems of verification.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A full explanation of the technical problems with verification can be found in CD/610, a paper submitted by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the United Nations conference on disarmament at Geneva in July 1985. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. We maintain a specialist seismic research unit known as Blacknest, committed to studying verification. It employs approximately 30 staff.

Mercenaries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the 1989 United Nations convention on mercenaries.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries was agreed in December 1989 by the General Assembly. We are examining it carefully against the background of current United Kingdom legislation. We hope to come to a decision soon.

Trident

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations in writing or orally he, Ministers or officials of his Department have received since 15 September concerning the status of the United Kingdom Trident programme in the context of nuclear disarmament commitments under article VI of the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have not received any representations on the status of our Trident programme under article VI of the NPT.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards (a) the threshold test ban treaty and (b) the peaceful nuclear explosions treaty; and how the United Kingdom capacity to continue nuclear testing in Nevada will be affected by these treaties.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the ratification of the threshold test ban treaty and the peaceful nuclear explosions treaty. Neither treaty will have any effect on the United Kingdom testing programme. This programme meets the testing limits agreed by the US and the Soviet Union.

Guyana

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to ensure that there are free and fair elections in Guyana.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During several ministerial meetings with Ministers of the Government of Guyana during the past year we have consistently emphasised that the forthcoming elections in Guyana should be seen to be free and fair. The last such occasion was in London on 16 October when I met the Guyanese Minister of Finance, Mr. Carl Greenidge.

We have welcomed President Hoyte's invitation to the Commonwealth Secretary General to send a Commonwealth election observer mission to monitor the elections and have informed the Secretary General that we will make a significant contribution towards the costs of an observer mission.

Syria

Mr. Madden: ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts he has had with the Syrian Government in the past year; whether he has any plans to visit Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has had no contacts with the Syrian Government and has no plans to visit Syria.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether any representatives of the Government of Syria have requested any meetings with Her Majesty's Government in the past year; what written communication there has been between the Syrian Government and Her Majesty's Government in that period; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what contacts officials acting on behalf of Her Majesty's Government have had with Syrian Government officials in the past year; whether there are any plans for British officials to visit Syria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have remained in contact with the Syrians since the break in relations in 1986. There have been no written communications during the past year, other than routine contact through the Syrian interests section in London and the British interests section in Damascus.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 22 October, column 55, he will set out when and through what channels the representations to the Chinese Government to which he refers, were made; and when and through what channels the response was received.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Representations were made by the British embassy in Peking to the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 25 August, and were followed up bilaterally in New York. A formal Chinese response was delivered to the embassy in Peking by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 27 August.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will urgently consider providing the telephone and postal concessionary facilities for the hostages in Iraq and their families in the United Kingdom that are provided by some other western European states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are already helping. We have approached British Telecom. From 1 November it will reduce by half the cost of calls to Iraq and give every assistance to families with large bills to pay. We are setting up a PO box arrangement in London for relatives to use. We shall continue to look for ways to reduce the burden on families.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he has made to assist the families of United Kingdom citizens detained in Iraq to communicate with those who are detained.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: We are doing everything possible to help families stay in touch. I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer I have given his other question today. We have also approached British Telecom and it has halved the cost of a five-minute call to Baghdad.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will permit the families of United Kingdom citizens detained in Iraq to communicate with those who are detained by means of the diplomatic bag.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: We are actively looking at all possible ways to help relatives. As I announced on 24 October, we are setting up a PO box in London to which letters can be sent. Our embassy in Baghdad will accept mail for postage in London.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for letters, books, clothes and other articles to be sent from the United Kingdom by relatives and friends of British citizens held in Iraq by British diplomatic bags; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: We are actively exploring all possible ways to help relatives. As I announced on 24 October, we are setting up a PO box in London to which letters can be sent.

Pakistan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent elections in Pakistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to the information so far available to us the elections in Pakistan took place peacefully. We shall study the reports from international observers when they are available. We look forward to working with the Government who emerge.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether British officials made any representations to the Pakistan authorities about the conduct of the Pakistan elections; how many complaints about the conduct of the Pakistan elections have been received by him or British officials; and whether British officials have been in contact with the international delegation monitoring the Pakistan elections.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of Pakistan were aware of the importance which we attach to free and fair elections. It would not be for us to receive complaints about the conduct of the elections and none has been made to us. British officials have been in contact with international observer groups monitoring the elections.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for reports by British officials on the conduct of the Pakistan elections to be placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. Reporting from our high commission is classified and will be treated in the usual manner.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extra resources have been available to the British Council in respect of English language teaching in eastern Europe.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 26 October 1990]: British Council expenditure on the promotion and development of the teaching of English in central and eastern Europe and the Soviet Union rose to some £2·5 million last year and is scheduled to rise to £5 million this year, the money coming in part from increases in the council's direct grant and in part from the know-how fund.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what extra resources have been made available to the British Broadcasting Corporation foreign language services in light of the developments in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 26 October 1990]: We recognise the value of World Service broadcasts to eastern Europe and are in regular touch with the BBC about the resources needed. Funding for the BBC World Service is set for periods of three years. In 1990-91, the final year of the present triennium, funding is 40 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979-80 and 13 per cent. higher than in 1987-88. Funding for the next such period, beginning in April 1991 falls within the 1990 public expenditure survey and will be announced following the autumn statement.

CIVIL SERVICE

Employment Terms (South-west)

Mr. Mellor: I am not aware of having received any representations on this subject.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that the lobby has been postponed.

"Next Steps"

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what recent discussions he has held in connection with progress with the "next steps" agency programme.

Mr. Mellor: I have frequent discussions on the excellent progress which is being made in implementing the "next steps" initiative.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC Budget

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest figure for the provision which has been made for expenditure relating to agriculture in the 1991 EEC budget; and what was the estimate for 1990.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 15 October 1990, c. 764]: Revision to the sterling-ecu exchange has caused some amendments to the figures originally given in reply to this question.

The provisions for expenditure relating to agriculture in the European Community's 1990 budget and 1991 draft budget are 30·0 billion ecu (£20·9 billion) and 33·4 billion ecu (£23·3 billion) respectively. In addition there is provision in each year for a monetary reserve of a further 1 billion ecu (£0·7 billion), which may be drawn on if unfavourable movements in the ecu-US dollar exchange rate cause an increase in expenditure on agricultural price support of more than 400 mecu (£279 million).

Sea Trout

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has commissioned into the decline of sea trout stocks in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Curry: I refer to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office, to a similar question. For England and Wales, there has been an overall fall in the catches of sea trout by rod and line in 1989 and 1990. This may not, however, be conclusive evidence of a decline in the stocks of sea trout supporting the fisheries. The interpretation of trends is complicated by the fact that there were dry summers in both years, as well as by the natural fluctuations in stock availability.

Departmental scientists are continuing to monitor the situation in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the National Rivers Authority.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received on spongiform encephalopathies from Dr. Carleton Gajdusek; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government take account of all available research findings, including those of Dr. Gajdusek.

Diet Survey

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information was obtained about the dietary intakes of food additives and contaminants from his survey "The Dietary and Nutritional Survey of British Adults"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The survey in question was carried out on behalf of my Department and that of the Department of Health. The intention was to gather information on the current dietary behaviour and nutritional status of the adult population, and in particular to establish a database of the range of food, drink and nutrient intakes of adults. It does not, therefore, contain any information on dietary intakes of food additives and contaminants although it can be used to calculate these in conjunction with data on their levels in individual foods obtained from analytical surveys.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the problems faced by farmers in less-favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: I have recently received a number of representations concerning the problems faced by farmers in less-favoured areas.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the initiatives currently taken by his Department and his future plans to assist farmers in less-favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: Farmers in less-favoured areas (LFAs) benefit from a range of support measures which are available to producers generally, including particularly the suckler cow premium and sheep annual premium. In addition, Government expenditure on hill livestock compensatory allowances, which are paid only in less-favoured areas, will amount to about £127 million this year; we have recently announced that the suckler cow premium for less-favoured area producers will be increased to the maximum amount payable under the EC regulations; and less-favoured area sheep producers will benefit next year from a special addition to the sheep annual premium of 4 ecus per eligible ewe. We shall continue to keep the position of less-favoured area farmers under review.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to bring forward from February 1991 the date of payment of the special £3·10 ewe premium.

Mr. Curry: As part of the price-fixing arrangements earlier this year, the EC Council of Agriculture Ministers agreed that sheep annual premium payments should be supplemented by a payment of 4 ecu per eligible ewe for producers in less-favoured areas. The agreement provided that the supplement should be payable from the 1991 sheepmeat marketing year which begins on 7 January 1991. There is little prospect of any change in timing, which would require a proposal from the European Commission and agreement by the Council of Ministers.

Store Lambs

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the average current price, in real terms, of store lambs; and what were the comparable figures for such lambs in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: The table sets out the average price of store lambs in England in September of this year and the previous three years. The figures in brackets reflect the prices at 1990 levels.

	Lowland store lambs		£ LFA store lambs
	First quality	Second quality

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and what was the comparable figure in real terms in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: The table sets out total payments of hill livestock compensatory allowances in the United Kingdom for this year and the previous three years. The figures in brackets reflect the payments at 1990 price levels.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to bring forward from 7 January 1991 the green pound devaluation for sheepmeat.

Mr. Curry: This devaluation will come into effect at the beginning of the sheepmeat marketing year on 7 January 1991. This is the normal practice and it would be an exception to the usual rules for a devaluation to take place before the start of the marketing year. Such an exception would have to be proposed by the Commission and agreed by the other member states.

Advisory Committees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the financial remunerations that the chairmen and members of each of his advisory committees receive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Details collected earlier are set out in "Public Appointments" issued by the Women's National Commission in July of which a copy is in the Library.

Animal Feedstuffs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the occasions in the last 12 months, when animal feedstuffs containing ruminant-derived protein have been shipped abroad, giving the quantities involved, the destinations, the date when the shipment occurred, and whether they reached their destination; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This information is not available.

European Community

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the joint meeting of the Agriculture and Trade Ministers on 26 October.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade.

Discussion concentrated on the Commission's proposal for a Community offer on agriculture in the current GATT round. A text was eventually produced by the presidency with Commission support, which made two changes to the draft offer and defined in general terms the Community's attitude to any agricultural measures which might be needed following an agreement in GATT. However, two member states were unable to agree and in these circumstances the presidency felt unable to put the matter to the vote.

I very much regret that, because of the failure of some member states to agree to the implications of commitments they had previously accepted, the Community has been unable to meet the deadline for submitting its offer. This is bad for British farmers, continental farmers and for trade as a whole. A further Council meeting is expected shortly.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what agricultural activities, including the responsibility for the storage and disposal of surpluses, have been transferred from the European Economic Community to member states in each year since 1973; and if he will publish a table indicating the expenditure involved in such transfers from the EEC to member states and to the United Kingdom in particular.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 17 October 1990]: No significant responsibilities for agricultural policy have been transferred from the European Community to member states since 1973.

Surplus Produce

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision has been made in the 1991 EEC budget for the dumping and destruction of surplus food and wine.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 15 October 1990, c. 764]: Revision to the sterling-ecu exchange has caused some amendments to the figures originally given in reply to this question.

The 1991 European Community draft budget provides for 854 million ecu (£595 million) of expenditure on the withdrawal of agricultural produce, not all of which is destroyed.

THE ARTS

Yorkshire and Humberside Arts Board

27. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what process he intends to appoint the chair of the Yorkshire and Humberside arts board.

Mr. Mellor: I am awaiting advice on these matters from the review team set up by the Arts Council to examine ways of implementing the broad principles for regional funding arrangements that I announced on 24 September.

Arts Council Funding

28. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proposals he has to revalue the Arts Council funding to keep pace with the rate of inflation.

Mr. Mellor: Arrangements for Arts Council funding will be the same as under my predecessors. Government funding of the Arts Council is now at its highest level ever in real terms, and I shall announce the level of the grant for the next three years next month.

Greater London Arts

29. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what changes he proposes to make in the composition and responsibilities of Greater London Arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Arts Council has announced that Greater London Arts will be replaced shortly by a new London arts board. The Arts Council has also announced the arrangements for the management of Greater London Arts in the period before the new London arts board is fully operational. I hope these arrangements will result in greater confidence in London's arts body.

33. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends local authorities to be involved in arts administration in Greater London.

Mr. Mellor: I expect the new London arts board to conform to the broad principles that I announced on 24 September, which reserve one third of the membership of the new regional arts boards for local authority nominees.

Theatres

30. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of deficits in national and regional theatres.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) earlier today.

Regional Arts

31. Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress is being made in the restructuring of the regional arts funding bodies.

Mr. Mellor: I announced on 24 September broad principles for regional funding arrangements which are currently being examined by a review team established by the Arts Council, and led by Timothy Marsh.

32. Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he will ensure a wide representation of local authorities on regional arts boards.

34. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to involve local authorities in the structure of arts administration.

39. Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends to involve local authorities in regional arts boards.

Mr. Mellor: Under the broad principles that I have announced, one third of the membership of regional arts boards will be reserved for local authority nominees.

38. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what process he plans to appoint the chair of the Northern arts board.

40. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what process he intends to choose the chair of the West Midlands regional arts board.

44. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consultation he will require the Arts Council to undertake before the appointment of local authority representatives on regional arts boards.

Mr. Mellor: I am awaiting advice on these matters from the review team set up by the Arts Council to examine ways of implementing the broad principles for further strengthening regional funding arrangements that I announced on 24 September.

43. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what consultations he had with regional arts associations and host authorities before announcing his plans to revise the structure of regional arts boards.

Mr. Mellor: I met the chairmen of the regional arts associations and representatives of the main local authority associations shortly after my announcement was made. I have set aside two months for consultation with all the interested parties.

Theatres and Museums (Repairs)

36. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of backlog of repairs and maintenance in theatre and museum buildings.

Mr. Mellor: I take account of the building and maintenance needs and priorities set out in the corporate plans provided for me annually by the national musuems and galleries which I sponsor. Most of these institutions have now carried out extensive studies of their buildings since untying from the Property Services Agency in 1988. It is for other relevant funding bodies, including local authorities, to determine the requirements for the buildings within their responsibilities.

I understand that the Theatres Trust is carrying out a small pilot study to establish whether a systematic examination of the national state of theatres could be undertaken at reasonable cost.

BBC Chairman

37. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will meet the chairman of the BBC to discuss the arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Arts Funding

41. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what have been the percentage increases in arts funding from his Department over the past five years in relation to inflation rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The figures requested are as follows:

	Central Government Arts Programme		Inflation rates retail prices index
Year	Cash total £ million	Percentage increase on previous year	Percentage increase on previous year
1986-87	343	—	—
1987-88	368	7·3	4·0
1988-89	414	12·5	6·0
1989-90	446	7·7	7·8
1990-91	494	10·8	[1]10·0

[1] Percentage change of first six months of the financial year over the same period of the previous year.

This clearly shows the Government's commitment to support of the arts.

North-west and Merseyside Arts Board

42. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to involve local authorities in the administration of the north-west and Merseyside arts board.

Mr. Mellor: Under the broad principles that I have announced, one third of the membership of the regional arts board for the north-west and Merseyside will be reserved for local authority nominees.

National Heritage

45. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next expects to meet civil service trade union leaders to discuss funding and staffing levels in relation to the national heritage.

Mr. Mellor: I meet representatives of the various civil service trade unions when appropriate to discuss matters of mutual interest. I intend to meet representatives from the IPMS to discuss recent developments at the natural history museum.

HEALTH

Child Patients

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of child patients discharged from a stay in hospital had been nursed in an adult ward for each year from 1979 to 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not available centrally. Guidance on the welfare of children and young people in hospital, on which the Department is currently consulting interested parties, re-emphasises our policy that children should be treated in discrete children's departments, separate from adult wards.

Community Nursing

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, further to the Minister for Health's reply to the hon. Member for Chislehurst, Official Report, column 423, 26 July, he can provide further information as to where responsibility will lie under the National Health Service and Community Care Act for improvement of the recruitment, administration and payment of those involved in community nursing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities, or NHS trusts where appropriate, will have responsibility for the recruitment, administration and payment of community nurses.

The working party set up by the NHS management executive as mentioned in my earlier reply will set out the general principles which should inform the management and organisation of nursing services in the community. Draft guidance explaining those principles will be issued for consultation in December.

Kidney Disease

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the provision of full renal units in England and Wales; what information he has on their provision in France, Germany and Italy; what proposals he has to increase such provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A number of representations on a wide range of issues concerning renal services has been received. Planning and provision of renal services is a matter for health authorities. Information on the provision of renal units in this country and in Europe is collected and published annually by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the arrangements to provide suitable transport for patients requiring dialysis outside the home where the nearest dialysis facilities are more than 40 miles distant.

Mr. Dorrell: Ambulance service transport is available free of charge for all patients, including those requiring dialysis, regardless of the distance to be travelled, provided their medical need for transport is certified by their GP or hospital consultant.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities for dialysis outside patients' homes exist within the health authority areas of Somerset, Cornwall, Bath, West Dorset, Gloucester and Cheltenham.

Mr. Dorrell: Somerset health authority does not have any facilities outside patients' homes but it is actively considering services for patients with chronic renal failure.

Cornwall health authority has facilities for acute haemodialysis, which has been available at Treliske hospital in Truro since 1987. In April 1988 a satellite unit at Treliske hospital was established.

In Bath health authority there are two continuous arteriovenous haemodialysis (CAVH) machines for use by patients at the Royal United hospital. Patients also have access to treatment, on referral, at the Southmead hospital, Bristol.

In West Dorset health authority, patients requiring dialysis outside their home are treated at the renal centre in Portsmouth. From 1 November 1990, West Dorset patients will be able to receive dialysis in a self-care dialysis unit at the Dorset county hospital. This new unit will provide facilities for approximately 12 patients per week, and it is expecting delivery of three Fresanious 1008 haemodialysis machines next week.

Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis (CAPD) training was set up and became autonomous at the Gloucester Royal hospital in January 1988. This service provides for Gloucester and Cheltenham residents. Some patients have care provided jointly by Oxford and Gloucester. A consultant nephrologist is now in place in Gloucester and plans are in progress for a haemodialysis service for Gloucestershire.

Satanic Rituals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement in respect of what directives his Department has issued for the diagnosis of child satanic ritual abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Diagnosis is a matter for professional judgment and would not be appropriate for issue of a directive. The Department of Health is considering guidance on the handling of cases with an element of organised or possibly ritual abuse when reissuing "Working Together", a guide to inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children from abuse.

Spinal Cord Injury

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics are kept by his Department on spinal cord injury; if he will consider ways in which the collection of statistics can be improved; and if he will consider making spinal cord injury a notifiable condition.

Mr. Dorrell: Statistics are produced from anonymised hospital records which contain details of diagnosis and treatment. The collection of these statistics is improving with new computer systems for patient administration statistics. There are no plans to make spinal cord injury a notifiable condition because only communicable diseases are notifiable under public health law.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the Spinal Injuries Association's programme for the prevention of spinal cord injury and on the effectiveness of such a programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department is aware from discussions with the Spinal Injuries Association that it has obtained funding for a three-year period from the Monument Trust for a programme for the prevention of spinal cord injury. We have received no representations concerning this programme.

Chronic Arachnoiditis

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being carried out into chronic arachnoiditis; whether he has considered making it a notifiable condition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science. The Medical Research Council is not currently supporting any research specifically into chronic arachnoiditis. The Department has not considered making chronic arachnoiditis a notifiable condition.

Abortions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of abortions over 12 weeks' gestation performed on women under (a) 20, (b) 20 to 24, (c) 25 to 34 and (d) over 34 years of age, resident in the South East Thames regional health authority, and in each constituent district health authority thereof, in each of the years (i) 1985, (ii) 1986, (iii) 1987, (iv) 1988 and (v) 1989, respectively.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in the following tables.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has undertaken or sponsored any research into the development of the hand-tapper communication system for deaf-blind people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No. I understand that this system is being developed by University college, London and that funding has been provided by the Science and Engineering Research Council and by the Nuffield Foundation and the National Deaf-Blind League.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether deaf-blind people are able to get hearing and sight-impaired communication systems through social services.

Mr. Dorrell: Items of equipment for disabled people, including people with a sensory disability, may be provided by health authorities or local authority social services departments. Local authorities have a duty under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 to meet the needs of people who, in the opinion of the authority, need an item of equipment to provide for their greater safety, comfort or convenience. Local authorities are empowered to recover all or part of the cost of any equipment they provide. Voluntary organisations also make available a range of specialist equipment for people with a sensory disability.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaf-blind people there are currently residing in long-stay mental handicap hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he intends to take to ensure that professionals working with deaf-blind people receive specialist training;

(2) what steps he intends to take to monitor the response of local social services departments to the social services inspectorate report, "Signposts";

(3) what action he intends to take to encourage local social services departments to implement the recommendations of the social services inspectorate report, "Signposts".

Mr. Dorrell: It is the responsibility of health authorities and local authorities to make arrangements for the training of professional staff. In 1991-92 the specific grant to local authorities for training social services staff will be extended to include staff who work with people who have physical, sensory or mental handicaps and will be increased to support expenditure of £35·5 million.

The recommendations in the report, "Signposts", were discussed at a seminar with directors of social services in October 1989. The seminar, which was co-hosted by the Department of Health, the Association of Directors of Social Services and a number of voluntary organisations, was aimed at promoting models of good practice in the delivery of services for deaf-blind people.

Local authorities will be expected to include in their community care plans services for people with multiple disabilities, including those with a multiple sensory disability. Such community care plans will be open to public inspection. We expect the social services inspectorate will play an active part in inspecting the plans and monitoring performance.

Camelford Pollution (Research)

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his inquiry under the chairmanship of Dame Barbara Clayton will consider epidemiological evidence from the research carried out by Surrey university funded by the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Dorrell: The Lowermoor incident health advisory group considered evidence from the university of Surrey when originally investigating the Lowermoor incident.

The reconvened group has been asked to advise on any recent studies into the health of the population at Camelford.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department will fund the research into the long-term effects of the pollution of the water supply in Camelford, Cornwall, previously funded by the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Dorrell: I have asked the Lowermoor incident health advisory group to advise me on the recent studies of the health of people in the Camelford area. I will be guided by it on the need, if any, for further research.

Health Visiting, Greenwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich on 29 June, Official Report, column 369, when the nursing officer from his Department visited Greenwich health authority; and who was present at the meeting.

Mr. Dorrell: A nursing officer from the Department visited Greenwich health authority on 13 June and held an informal meeting with the then chief nursing adviser/director of training (acting) and the director of community nursing (acting).

Second Sensory Impairments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to local health authorities to ensure that people who are deaf or blind are adequately monitored for the development of a second sensory impairment.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health does not issue guidance to health authorities on such clinical procedures.

Deaf People (Eye Tests)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider allowing free eye tests for deaf people, given the problems of dual sensory impairment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government recognise the vital importance of sight to deaf people, especially where they also have visual problems. All children (including deaf children) are already entitled to free sight tests under the NHS, as are full-time students under 19, people on low incomes, people with exceptionally powerful lenses, diabetics, glaucoma sufferers and their relatives aged over 40, and people referred by their GP to the hospital eye service. These categories were decided on in the light of medical advice.

We shall consider carefully the views on this matter which were recently put to officials by a member of the Social Services Select Committee.

Whittington Hospital

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has received to convert the Whittington hospital into a self-governing trust; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am not aware of any proposals for the Whittington hospital to apply to become an NHS trust.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of the new central computer at the London ambulance service; to whom the contract was let; and what is its expected period of operation.

Mr. Dorrell: A contract was let in 1987 with International Aeradio Ltd. to provide a computer-aided despatch system, in the sum of £3,293,620. The date for operation was scheduled for January 1991, but this is currently under review.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what load testing has been undertaken on the London ambulance service central control system; when this was done; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Dorrell: Load tests were undertaken on the central control system on 26 June and 13 September 1990. The results did not meet the standards set down in the user specification in either test. We do not intend to publish the results.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of patients who have been regraded from chair to walking by the London ambulance service in the months of April, May, June, July, August and September.

Mr. Dorrell: No patients have been reclassified from chair to walking. The London ambulance service accepts the classification given by the ordering authority unless the crew finds that a patient requires further assistance and needs to be regraded from walking to chair case. The reverse situation is never applied.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of non-urgent patients whose transport has been cancelled by the London ambulance service per week in June, July, August and September.

Mr. Dorrell: Data are not collected in the form requested but monthly figures for the non-emergency service are available as follows:

	Patient journeys cancelled per month
June	4,197
July	4,329
August	4,825
September	7,372

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost of the central ambulance control of the London ambulance service for each year since 1989 in constant terms.

Mr. Dorrell: The available figures are as follows:

1989-90 outturn	2,569
1990-91 budget	2,823

It is not possible to convert the 1989-90 figures to 1990-91 prices as general inflation outturn for 1990-91 is not yet known.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of non-emergency patients carried by the London ambulance service in (a) emergency vehicles, (b) taxis, (c) non-emergency ambulances and (d) the hospital car service for the months of April, May, June, July, August and September.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is as follows:

Patient Journeys	(a) Emergency ambulance	(b) Taxi	(c) Non-emergency ambulance	(d) Ambulance car service
April	5,270	6,591	64,039	13,894
May	5,463	10,929	71,939	14,020
June	4,302	11,611	72,077	14,892
July	4,615	12,285	74,070	14,097
August	5,101	9,728	67,415	13,549
September	4,887	10,559	61,071	14,785

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what involvement the National Audit Office has had in the installation and funding of the London ambulance service central control computer.

Mr. Dorrell: The National Audit Office has had no involvement in the installation and funding of the London ambulance service central control computer.

Legionella

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute a study into the dangers to employee and public health arising from legionella in power station cooling towers.

Mr. Dorrell: Legionella bacteria are naturally occurring organisms widely distributed in the environment and from time to time are known to exist in power station cooling towers. There have however been no documented outbreaks anywhere in the world of legionnaire's disease among employees or the general public, associated with large natural updraft cooling towers such as those used in power stations. Neither has the public health laboratory service found any such association in its outbreak investigations. Research is under way to determine whether or not the absence of any outbreaks of legionnaire's disease can be attributed to the relative isolation of power station cooling towers; or whether some design feature of these towers renders them unable or less likely to disperse legionella in an aerosol form that can be ingested and cause legionnaire's disease. The Department is keeping in close touch with this research.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether those hospitals, units or whole health districts which are granted self-governing trust status will be eligible for regional health authority development funds.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. NHS trusts will receive funding through contracts for the services they provide. In addition they will be able to borrow within external financing limits, which will be set for each trust annually.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will arrange for the numbers of registered overseas voters in each parliamentary constituency to be published in the 1991 edition of the electoral statistics to be produced by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Mr. Dorrell: These statistics will be included by the OPCS in "Electoral Statistics 1991" (series EL No. 18) to be published next year, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of people on the electoral roll for England and Wales in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The total numbers of parliamentary electors on registers in England and Wales in 1989 and 1990 were 38,560,541 and 38,596,117 respectively. Corresponding figures for each constituency have been published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in "Electoral Statistics 1990" (series EL No. 17), a copy of which is in the Library.

NHS Campaigns

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much (a) his Department and (b) the national health service spent in the last year for which figures are available on marketing (i) the national health service itself, (ii) health education campaigns, (iii) healthy eating campaigns and (iv) AIDS campaigns.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Expenditure figures for 1989-90 on public information campaigns, in the four areas requested, run by the Department are as follows:

	£ million
National Health Service	0·356
Health Education (Drug Misuse)	3·808
Healthy Eating (Food Hygiene)	0·373
AIDS	1·493

The Department also funds the Health Education Authority whose total expenditure in 1989-90 was just over £27 million. A large proportion of this money was spent on healthy eating and AIDS health education campaigns.

Health authorities have to date reported spending of over £13·25 million in 1989-90 on local HIV prevention initiatives. They also ran other local health education campaigns, but the financial details of these are not held centrally.

Psychiatric Services

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sum is currently transferred from Mersey region to Wirral for psychiatric services; and if this sum could be divided between acute services and community support services.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority.

Ondansetron

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all patients receiving chemotherapy cancer treatment at a self-governing trust hospital or a directly managed hospital will have the drug Ondansetron available to them if it is prescribed by the senior medical doctor in charge of their treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ondansetron is available for prescription by doctors throughout the national health service for the treatment of nausea and vomiting in patients undergoing chemotherapy and/or radiotherapy for cancer. Some hospitals, however, have drawn up formularies of preferred treatments for many conditions from which the doctors involved would usually prescribe.

HIV

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is planned to be spent in the HIV budget in the Wirral during the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: Of the £3,602,000 allocated this year to Mersey regional health authority for HIV-related services, I understand that the region has allocated £269,000 to the Wirral health authority.

Hull Health Authority

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the length of the waiting list of orthopaedic operations by hospital in the Hull health authority area; and what is the number of patients awaiting treatment.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 19 October 1990]: Information about the number of patients on hospital waiting lists is collected according to the specialty in which treatment will be given and not by the diagnosis or type of operation. The information is available centrally only in terms of the district of treatment, not individual hospitals.

The number of patients waiting more than a year in trauma and orthopaedics in Hull district health authority has fallen from 343 in March 1979 to 51 in March 1990. In addition, the number of patients treated in this specialty in this district has risen by 35 per cent. between 1979 and 1990 from 2,300 to 3,100. The total waiting list reduced over the same period, from 874 to 452. The total number waiting in March 1990 therefore represented on average only eight weeks' work in hand, compared with the 20 weeks' work represented by the total list in March 1979.

School Milk

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy to provide immediate repayment of moneys spent on the provision of milk for the under-fives for individual schools and nursery units that qualify for free milk under the Welfare Food Regulations 1988; and if this provision is made for private nurseries.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 19 October 1990]: The Welfare Food Regulations 1988 allow for the provision of free milk for the under-fives in registered day nurseries, local education authority day nurseries and schools, or those in the care of registered child minders. Repayment for the milk provided is made as soon as practicable following the receipt of an application under the regulations.

The provision covers all registered private nurseries.

DEFENCE

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the future of EFA.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom remains committed to the EFA programme. There will be a continuing need to ensure the future air defence of the United Kingdom and British forces wherever they may be located.

Armed Services (Discipline)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to review the disciplinary arrangements for members of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such a review has already been carried out in preparation for anticipated legislation on this subject in the forthcoming Session.

Middle East

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, during his recent meeting with the United States Defence Secretary in London, he discussed the deployment of chemical and nuclear weapons in the middle east.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend discussed a range of current defence issues when he met Mr. Cheney on 15 October.

Kuwait Invasion

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the additional daily cost per vessel incurred by the extended stationing of Royal Navy ships in the Persian Gulf and/or the Indian Ocean in response to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Costs are not collected in this way.

Fuel Air Explosives

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stocks of fuel air explosives are held by United Kingdom armed forces; and what research is currently being undertaken on such explosives in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom does not hold stocks of fuel air explosives. It is not the practice to provide information on detailed aspects of our research programme.

Arms Sales Conference

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has received an invitation to attend or participate in the day-school colloquium "Future of International Arms Sales", organised by the Trust for Research and Education on the Arms Trade, to be held in Liverpool on 17 November.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will institute an inquiry into the long-term health effects of radiation doses received by civilian fitters who worked on the refit of the nuclear reactors in the Royal Navy submarines HMS Renown, HMS Dreadnought, HMS Churchill and HMS Warspite.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I see no need for such an inquiry. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 19 October, Official Report, column 964.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the refit of HMS Churchill and on her future deployment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend announced in his statement on 25 July 1990 that the Royal Navy would maintain 16 submarines in the longer term, of which around three quarters would be nuclear powered. Following this announcement, the Government have decided to decommission a number of older nuclear-powered submarines, including HMS Churchill. Work on Churchill's refit has therefore stopped.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will institute an inquiry into the levels of radiation exposure received by civilian refit workers in the reactor room of HMS Renown in the early 1970s.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I see no need to institute such an inquiry. In all submarine refits individual exposure levels have been controlled in accordance with MOD and statutory instructions.

Royal Ordnance Factory, Chorley

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the cause and consequences of the explosion at the royal ordnance ammunition factory at Chorley on 13 October.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is not a matter for the Ministry of Defence.

Arms Sales

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain a copy for his departmental library of the videocassette and transcript of the BBC2 television programme, "Death on Delivery" on arms sales, broadcast in the "Open Space" series on 3 July.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role the Defence Export Services Organisation has played in the sale of weaponry and military equipment to Iraq since May 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Export Services Organisation, in all its assistance to industry, has scrupulously followed Government policy as it has developed in relation to military sales to Iraq. Prior to September 1980 all potential exports to Iraq were considered on a case-by-case basis. In September 1980, at the beginning of the Iran-Iraq conflict, all exports of lethal equipment to Iraq were prohibited. This prohibition was further developed in the guidelines announced on 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 450. In conformity with the United Nations resolution, all exports to Iraq, except for some medical and humanitarian exports, are now banned.

Submarine Patrols

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any Royal Navy submarines or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation submarines were on patrol off the Aberdeenshire coast on 4 October.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume that the hon. Lady is referring to an incident on 4 October involving the fishing vessel Moray Adventurer. No United Kingdom or NATO submarines were in the vicinity at the time of the incident.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken by his Department to advise coastguards, fishermen and harbour-masters of patrols by Royal Navy or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation submarines in fishing waters off the coast of Scotland; and if he will make a statement on the efficiency of such communications.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For security reasons details of individual submarine movements are not disclosed. The more usual areas in which submarines exercise in United Kingdom waters are, however, clearly marked on Admiralty charts.

Submarines (Fishing Nets)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents have been recorded by his Department of the snagging of nets of fishing vessels by Royal Navy or North Atlantic Treaty Organisation submarines in each of the past five years giving the location of such incidents.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Date	Vessel	Location
18 February 1987	Summer Mourne	Irish Sea
26 September 1987	Heroine	North Channel
6 December 1987	Prevail	North Channel

Date	Vessel	Location
27 October 1988	Brilliant Star	Sound of Bute
3 December 1988	Mount Eden	North West of Mallin Head
17 April 1989	Laurel	Irish Sea
28 June 1989	Huntress	Firth of Clyde
12 September 1989	Contestor	Irish Sea
13 November 1989	Scotia	Butt of Lewis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if scientists from (i) the atomic weapons establishments, (ii) the Blacknest verification centre or (iii) his Department have (a) been given access by the United States Government or weapons development laboratories to data arising from United States nuclear tests in Nevada and (b) been permitted to be present to monitor United States nuclear tests since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under the 1958 agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States for co-operation in the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, such information may be exchanged and joint experiments may be conducted. United Kingdom scientists may be present at the nuclear test site in connection with joint United Kingdom/United States tests for periods of several months.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out in the Official Report the proportion of overall costs of the United Kingdom nuclear testing programme that is made up by (a) research, design and development, (b) nuclear testing and (c) deployment and storage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would not be in the national interest to reveal such details of the United Kingdom's nuclear testing programme.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of nuclear warhead tests conducted by or on behalf of the United Kingdom in Nevada since 1979 were undertaken to check the safety and reliability of the warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such tests are carried out in order to maintain the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons capability and it is not our practice to comment on specific aspects.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total radioactive inventory that has been vented to the atmosphere from United Kingdom nuclear explosive tests conducted underground at the Nevada test site since 1963; and whether his Department has conducted any survey on the potential adverse health effects posed by such releases of airborne radioactivity.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total radioactive inventory released from United Kingdom underground tests at the Nevada test site amounts to less than 100 Curies—3·7 terabecquerels—and consisted of short-lived gaseous isotopes. No releases were of any health or environmental consequence on site or off site.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 18 October, Official Report, column 923, if he will indicate details of the recent exchanges between officials of his Department and Messrs de Normann and Mackenzie Geidt.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The exchanges between officials of my Department and Messrs de Normann and Mackenzie Geidt that followed the Central TV programme "Cambodia—The Betrayal" shown on 9 October related to their concern about allegations made in the media about them and the Ministry of Defence.

Smoke and Noise Emissions

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he intends to ensure that the emission of smoke and noise on defence property that might cause a public nuisance will be kept to the minimum necessary to protect the national interest.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he intends to ensure that the emission of smoke and noise on defence property that might cause a public nuisance will be kept to the minimum necessary to protect the national interest.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The policy of my Department is to act at all times in an environmentally responsible manner. However, essential activities, such as military training and research, unavoidably result in the emission of smoke and noise, in consequence of which an amendment has been made to the Environmental Protection Bill to exempt such nuisances which occur on defence premises. It is intended that the nuisance caused by smoke and noise will be kept to a minimum and I have placed in the Library a policy statement to this effect which is being circulated within the Department and to visiting forces.

Community Charge

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the percentage of service personnel in service accommodation in Britain who are liable for community charges (a) below and (b) above the average, as calculated for the purposes of reimbursement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The totals were (a) 48·2 per cent. and (b) 51·8 per cent.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the percentage of service personnel in service accommodation in Britain who will be responsible for community charges above the average, as calculated for the purposes of reimbursement, but are not eligible for reimbursement of accommodation charges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 22 October 1990]: A total of 33·2 per cent. in 1990-91.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the percentage of service personnel in service accommodation in Britain who will be responsible for community charges above the average, as calculated for the purposes of reimbursement, and will be eligible for reimbursement of accommodation charges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 22 October 1990]: A total of 18·7 per cent. in 1990-91.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Grant-maintained Schools

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the cost of increasing by 50 per cent. the formula allocation made to grant-maintained schools for equipment and small-scale capital projects for the year 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend announced on 10 October that the formula allocation paid to grant-maintained schools for equipment and small-scale capital projects would be increased by 50 per cent. for the financial year 1991-92. The cost of this increase in 1991-92 for existing grant-maintained schools and schools approved so far for incorporation as grant-maintained schools by April 1991 is £430,000. There are no additional costs in 1990-91.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the cost to date of the grant-maintained schools programme.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of the grant-maintained schools programme up to the end of the 1989-90 financial year was £3·5 million. Of this, £2 million was spent on meeting the cost of inherited capital commitments. The £3·5 million does not include annual maintenance grant payments to schools which were recouped in full from local education authorities.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the cost of increasing by 50 per cent. the annual amount of specific grant paid to grant-maintained schools for the year 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend announced on 10 October that the annual amount of specific grant paid to grant-maintained schools would increase by an average of £10,000 for the financial year 1991-92, a 50 per cent. increase on current plans. This specific grant supports staff development and other preparation for implementing the national curriculum and assessment arrangements. The cost of this increase in 1991-92 for existing grant-maintained schools and schools approved so far for incorporation as grant-maintained schools by April 1991 is £530,000. There are no additional costs in 1990-91.

Nursery Education

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures, in ranked order, for the percentage of under-fives in nursery schools, nursery classes and primary classes by local education authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Eggar: The percentage of children under five attending maintained nursery schools, nursery classes and infant classes and infant classes in primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1989 in rank order is given in the following table. Similar information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Odette Churchill

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General how many applications have been received under the Public Records Act 1958 for access to information relating to the activities of Odette Churchill in the second world war; and how many have been refused.

The Attorney-General: Requests for access to information from records that are not open to public inspection are the responsibility of individual Departments. I understand that no information is available about the number of applications that have been made for information relating to Odette Churchill's wartime activities.

WALES

Community Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the programme he intends to follow in providing additional finances to voluntary bodies other than housing associations in Wales (a) in the present financial year, (b) in the 1991-92 financial year and (c) in subsequent financial years in order to ensure adequate availability of appropriate housing to match the requirements of his programme for the implementation of care in the community.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 29 October, c. 360.

Schools (Surplus Places)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards surplus places in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This is set out in Welsh Office circular 20/88, entitled "Educational Quality in Wales: The Response to Falling School Rolls", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the planning appeals he has decided for west Swansea since he became Secretary of State; and in which he found in favour of the developer.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the following table:

Schools (Surplus Places)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy for providing funds for the construction of new schools in areas with surplus places in existing schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Most Government financial resources, including educational resources, made available to local authorities are distributed by means of a formula and are not hypothecated to particular services or schemes. It is for local education authorities to determine their needs for new schools, taking account of published policy on the reduction of surplus places, and to decide how these needs can best be met within the resources available to them.

PRIME MINISTER

South Hams

Q23. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make an official visit to South Hams.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Textile Factories

Q65. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a textile factory.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Territorial Claims

Q155. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to encourage signatories to the treaty of Rome and the Helsinki agreement to disavow territorial claims over their co-signatories.

The Prime Minister: None. No machinery has been established for considering such questions under the Helsinki final act. The European Communities have no competence in this area.

Food Mountains

Q162. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the issue of the size of food mountains in the EEC.

The Prime Minister: Decisions on what issues to raise at the next European Council in December will best be made nearer the time. At the meeting on 27-28 October I emphasised to my colleagues the importance of the Community playing a more constructive part in the current GATT negotiations over reducing support for agriculture.

Scottish Fishing Industry

Q168. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will establish a Government inquiry into the financial prospects of the Scottish fishing industry.

The Prime Minister: No. The industry's earnings this year have increased, despite reduced volumes of fish being landed.

Funding of the Heritage

Q194. Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will meet lobbyists to Parliament from IPMS and other trade unions to discuss the funding of the heritage, on 31 October.

The Prime Minister: I am advised that the meeting has been cancelled. My right honourable Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment set out the Government's approach to the preservation and enhancement of our heritage in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200).

Tanks (Spare Parts)

Q241. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has had on the availability of desert-related spare parts for tanks and armoured vehicles to the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards in the middle east.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any such representations. Sufficient spare parts and major assemblies are available to meet anticipated requirements.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 30 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Coastal Defences

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional resources are being provided by his Department to help improve Britain's coastal defences.

Mr. Curry: Increased funding for coast and tidal defence works was announced following the 1988 and 1989 public expenditure surveys. By 1992-93 the provision for this work will have increased to £43 million compared with £33 million in the current financial year. The grant supplement paid on sea and tidal defence work was also increased in the last survey from 15 to 20 per cent. In addition, in response to the storms of last winter, increased supplementary credit approval of £2·3 million is to be made available for local authority schemes during the remainder of the current financial year.

Varroa Treatment

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are being taken by his Ministry to approve treatments of varroa for use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Any company wishing to seek approval to market a suitable treatment can apply to the veterinary medicines directorate at Weybridge for a product licence under Medicines Act procedures.

Horses (Export)

Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his latest proposals in the European Economic Community negotiations on the question of the export of live horses from the United Kingdom for slaughter and consumption on the continent; if it is still his policy that this trade will not be permitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There have been no recent negotiations in the Community on this subject. It remains firm Government policy to press for the retention of controls designed to prevent the export of live horses for slaughter.

Departmental Reorganisation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what organisations and sections within his Department presently housed in London are being considered for dispersal to provincial areas.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend and I are currently considering relocating some of the Department's headquarters functions away from London. The areas under consideration include work on pesticides and plant health, some of our statistical services and sections of our personnel, management and common services.

Intervention Products

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 25 October, about products released from intervention, if he will list the countries which bought the produce listed and the quantities in each case.

Mr. Gummer: Exporters who take products from intervention are not required to sell to particular countries but are free to find markets outside the European Community. Community arrangements allow exporters up to one year to supply proof of export. Consequently, information about the destinations of the products released from intervention in the 12 months to 30 September 1990 is not available.

Research and Development

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to restructure his priorities board for research and development.

Mr. Gummer: The membership of the priorities board for research and development in agriculture and food was expanded in June this year to include two more independent members. It now comprises an independent chairman, six independent members, MAFF's chief scientific adviser, a DAFS scientific adviser and the secretary to the AFRC. The full membership of the board is as follows:—

Dr. N. Brian Smith CBE
Professor T. L. Blundell FRS (with effect from 1 January 1991)
Mr. S. G. Metcalfe
Mr. J. G. Rymer
Dr. P. J. Bunyan FRSC
Dr. T. W. Hegarty
Mr. I. Howie FBIM
Mr. G. E. G. Harvey
Professor C. J. Leaver FRS
Mrs. B. M. Kelly

With the exception of the chairman, each independent board member chairs one of six advisory sectoral groups (ASGs). These provide the board with support and advice on what R and D is being sponsored within Government and industry. They have replaced the 18 occasional research consultative committees which previously reported to the board. The ASGs cover:

Ruminants
Monogastric Animals
Arable Crops
Horticulture
Food

and bring together representatives from the main funding bodies of R and D from Government and industry in each sector.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has published his response to the food safety and applied nutrition research consultative committee report to the priorities board of November 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The priorities board for R and D in agriculture and food took account of the food safety and applied nutrition research consultative committee report in preparing its 1990 report to agriculture Ministers and the chairman of the AFRC. The board's advice was accepted and is being implemented.

Food Imports

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to stop the dumping of foodstuffs from eastern Europe at uneconomic prices in European Community countries via eastern Germany.

Mr. Curry: Foodstuffs imported duty-free into East Germany from eastern Europe during the transitional period following German unification must not exceed traditional trade flows and may be used only on the territory of the former German Democratic Republic. The Commission's "end-use relief" system of control is designed to ensure that these products do not leak into the rest of the EC. It requires permits specifying the "end use" of a product to be issued on import and allows customs authorities to make the necessary checks during processing and trading to monitor stated "end uses". Any other foodstuffs entering East Germany will be subject to normal Community duties and levies.

Agri-chemicals

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the prices of agri-chemicals in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: No. Pricing is a matter for the market to determine.

Liming Grants

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek powers to reinstate grants for liming land.

Mr. Curry: Farmers taking out improvement plans under the Farm and Conservation Grant Regulations are already eligible for grant aid towards the cost of liming land where this is part of a programme of reseeding and regeneration. In the less-favoured areas lime treatment alone is eligible for grant where it can be demonstrated to be genuine restoration and not routine treatment. I have no plans to extend the grant aid to application of lime in other circumstances.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a regional breakdown in percentage terms of the number of the unemployed in each region who have been out of work for over one year on the most recently available figures.

Mr. Jackson: The information is available in the Library. Unemployment figures by duration are produced quarterly. The table shows the percentage of unemployed claimants who have been unemployed for 12 months or more for each region in July 1990, the latest available date.

Region	[1] Percentage
South East (excluding Greater London)	19·4
East Anglia	21·1

[1] Percentage of unemployed claimants who have been unemployed for 12 months or more in each region.

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the five travel-to-work areas with the highest percentage of employment in manufacturing and their respective figures.

Mr. Jackson: The most recent estimates of employment in travel-to-work areas are taken from the September 1987 census of employment. They cover employees in employment and exclude the self-employed. The five travel-to-work areas with the highest percentage of employment in manufacturing industry were:

	[1] Percentage
Haverill	56·0
Pendle	55·4
Barrow-in-Furness	54·6
Hawick	53·6
Accrington and Rossendale	48·9

[1] Employees in Divisions 2 to 4 of the Standard Industrial Classification 1980, as a percentage of all employees in the travel-to-work area.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many were employed in the (a) agricultural industry, (b) coal mining industry, (c) shipbuilding and ship-repair industries and (d) the steel industry as at June of 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Jackson: The information is given in the table:

Small Businesses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to retain the training and enterprise council structure to enable small businesses to have a say in their local organisations.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are required to include at least one executive on their board who has first-hand experience of running a small business.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to aid the establishment of small firm investment companies to provide equity and loan licensing for small businesses.

Mr. Forth: I have at present no plans to do so. I am, however, always ready to consider suggestions for new ways of helping small firms if there is clear evidence of a gap in market provision.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to establish an industrial development advisory service to provide advice and assistance to small firms and the self-employed.

Mr. Forth: Last year my Department's small firms service provided 50,000 counselling sessions for small firms and answered over 300,000 inquiries. Responsibility for small firms advice is, of course, being transferred to the emerging network of training and enterprise councils. In the training and enterprise council area that encompasses Southport the corporate and business plans are still under development. It is recognised locally that a full and comprehensive service to the small business sector will be necessary.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on investigations into the explosion and fire that occurred recently during construction of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Forth: Inspectors from the Health and Safety Executive are still investigating the circumstances of the fire at the channel tunnel site on 22 September.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the textile and clothing industries in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Jackson [pursuant to his reply, 24 October 1990, c. 240]: I regret that my reply of 24 October 1990 contained two incorrect figures. The correct information is set out hereafter.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration he has given to the employment and training needs of deaf-blind people.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 29 October 1990]: My Department provides a service for all people with disabilities treating each as an individual and identifying the most appropriate action. People who are deaf-blind can use the full range of Employment Department services available to anyone with a disability including those services offered by the network of employment rehabilitation centres and ASSET centres. Through them we have been able to refer some deaf-blind people for specialist help through the close links maintained with organisations such as RNIB and SENSE. As outlined in the consultative document, "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities", we are intending to expand access to specialist help further by increasingly providing employment rehabilitation through agents such as voluntary bodies. We are also intending to strengthen the training given to disablement resettlement officers and the disablement advisory service with a view to providing a more professional and effective service.

In training we try to encourage integrated provision although there is specialist help available mainly through the residential providers which cater for the particular needs of deaf-blind trainees. Training and enterprise councils now have responsibility for co-ordinating training locally and they will address the particular needs of their local community which may include developing provision for deaf-blind trainees.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether hearing and sight impaired communication equipment is available to deaf-blind people through the disablement advisory service.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Footwear and Textile Industries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the numbers of those employed in the footwear and textile industries per month, by industry, using the latest figures available, since April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 29 October 1990]: The numbers of employees in the footwear and textile industries are supplied in the table:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Investigations

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the results or progress of any investigations into (a) Caird Development Ltd. and (b) Cleveland Fuels Ltd. in respect of recent acquisitions or any other matters.

Mr. Redwood: I cannot discuss the affairs of individual companies.

Supervisory Bodies

222. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will be seeking any assurances on democracy and openness from the organisations applying for supervisory body status under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: In general these are matters to be determined by the constitution of the body and by its membership. However, under the Companies Act 1989 the Secretary of State can recognise a supervisory body only if it appears to him that its rules and practices relating to membership, eligibility as a company auditor and discipline are fair and reasonable and include adequate provision for appeals.

Company Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to exempt any auditing firms from the monitoring and compliance rules in accordance with schedule 11 (10) of Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: Under paragraph 10 of schedule 11 of the Companies Act 1989 anybody seeking recognition as a supervisory body under part II of the Act must have adequate arrangements and resources for the effective monitoring and enforcement of compliance with its rules. The Secretary of State must be satisfied that an applicant's proposals meet this requirement before he can recognise the body.

Accountancy Profession

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will provide a list of the disciplinary cases he has asked the accountancy profession to investigate.

Mr. Redwood: Since 1988 my Department has referred 15 cases where members' conduct was thought to warrant consideration by their professional body.

Audit Policy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to require that before any organisation is granted supervisory status in audit or accountancy, its rules should include disclosure of partners' fees, and partnership donations for political or charitable purposes.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State has no power to refuse recognition on these grounds.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations his Department has made in the years 1989 and 1990 to (a) CCAB Ltd. and (b) the Auditing Practices Committee; what topics those representations covered; and whether he will place the text of all such representations in the Library.

Mr. Redwood: My Department discusses matters of concern as necessary with representatives of the CCAB. It also participates fully in the work of the Auditing Practices Committee through its non-voting membership of the committee, and it comments on the committee's exposure drafts. Copies of responses to exposure drafts are available in the libraries of the CCAB bodies, and I have placed in the Library a copy of the Department's written comments made since January last year.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on any organisation granted supervisory status in audit or accountancy having rules to prevent auditors from having the beneficial ownership of shares in the companies they audit.

Mr. Redwood: Under the Companies Act 1989, the Secretary of State cannot recognise a supervisory body unless it appears to him to have adequate rules and practices in respect of professional integrity and independence.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what indications he now has as to the work programme of the Accounting Standards Board.

Mr. Redwood: As has been indicated in its public bulletins, the Accounting Standards Board has adopted the statements of standard accounting practice extant at 1 August, formulated a policy on statements of recommended accounting practice, and dealt with a number of procedural matters. It is currently engaged in consideration of a number of basic issues of principle as a precursor to work on individual accounting standards.

Company Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to ensure that all employees of public limited companies receive a short version of the companies' accounts and a notice telling them where the long version may be consulted.

Mr. Redwood: No. It is for companies to decide how best to communicate with those of its employees who are not shareholders in the company.

Company Management

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in how many public limited liability companies the position of chairperson and chief executive are combined.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not available from Government sources. Information relating to appointments in individual companies is, however, open to public inspection at Companies house.

Import Penetration

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to reduce import penetration.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department's policies aim to foster the competitiveness of British industry.

Brewing Industry

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Director General of Fair Trading to discuss the developing structure of the brewing industry.

Mr. Redwood: I met the Director General of Fair Trading on 22 August to discuss a wide variety of competition issues. My Department keeps in close touch with the Office of Fair Trading, which is monitoring developments in the brewing industry in the light of the 1989 MMC report on the supply of beer.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the amount of regional preferential assistance paid to each standard region of England, Scotland and Wales in each year from 1978-79 to the most recent available date in (a) cash and (b) constant prices and with an annual index.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The requested information with regard to regional preferential assistance from 1978-79 to the most recent year is as follows:

Notes to tables 1, 2 and 3:

1. All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries.
2. The totals do not always equal the sum of the component parts because of rounding.
3. Includes some minor expenditure in west midlands in respect of Oswestry TTWA which ceased to be an assisted area in 1982-83.
4. Certain TTWAs in the west midlands were designated as assisted areas on 29 November 1984.
5. Expenditure on a 1988-89 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.
6. Includes expenditure in Cumbria, otherwise shown within the totals for northern region.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants, regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants; expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Scottish Companies

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of (a) Scottish registered public limited companies, (b) Scottish companies quoted on the unlisted securities market and (c) what has been the change in Scottish quoted companies, in percentage terms, between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Redwood: At 19 October there were 531 Scottish registered public limited companies.

The number of Scottish companies quoted on the unlisted securities market is a matter for the International Stock Exchange, as therefore is the change in percentage terms between 1979 and 1989.

Textiles

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the amount of textiles (a) imported and (b) exported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Figures showing the total value of United Kingdom imports and exports of textiles (SITC division 65) are published in the annual editions of Overseas Trade Statistics, which can be consulted in the House of Commons Library.

Company Directors (Disqualification)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the guidelines from his Department to insolvency practitioners as to the requirements for prosecution of a case for disqualification of a company director reported by a liquidator to be unfit to hold the position; and if he will make a statement on any proposed changes to such guidelines.

Mr. Redwood: My Department issues written guidance notes to insolvency practitioners on the completion of statutory returns and reports on the conduct of directors of insolvent companies. The notes, which were last revised in March 1987, are in the process of revision to take into consideration the general attitude of the courts to disqualification applications, recently decided cases and the views of official receivers and insolvency practitioners.

The insolvency service also communicates with insolvency practitioners on disqualification matters through the insolvency practitioners' joint liaison committee, which represents insolvency practitioners and members of five of the recognised professional bodies on technical matters, and through a series of "Dear IP" letters. Members of the disqualification unit also visit insolvency practitioners frequently to discuss disqualification work.

I have placed copies of the guidance notes in the Libraries of the House.

Agency Recognition

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline the terms of remit of the Office of Fair Trading inquiry into agency recognition requirements for all media; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that officials of the Director General of Fair Trading are in discussion with various associations of publishers concerning the terms of their agency recognition agreements in relation to the provisions of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976.

Monopolies and Mergers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to make a further reference of a public sector body to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980.

Mr. Redwood: As part of its regular programme of efficiency studies of nationalised industries, the commission has been asked to look into the service provided by London Underground Ltd. The formal reference was made today. It asks the MMC to look at whether LUL could improve its quality of service through greater efficiency and at whether cost savings could be made without affecting quality of service or the programme of safety improvements which LUL is already undertaking. The Commission will report in six months. A copy of the reference has been placed in the Library.

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which accountancy bodies have applied under the Companies Act 1989 for recognition of their professional qualification.

Mr. Redwood: To date, the following bodies have applied for recognition:

(i) The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales,
(ii) The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland,
(iii) The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

I have placed a copy of each application in the Library of the House. Certain material submitted in confidence has been excluded from the copy placed in the Library.

Chartered Institute of Accountants in England and Wales

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what independent advice he proposes to seek in evaluating whether the Chartered Institute of Accountants in England and Wales is a fit body to exercise supervisory powers under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: My right hon. Friend will carry out such consultation as he thinks necessary to enable him to reach a view on any application for recognition as a supervisory body under the Companies Act 1989.

Company Directors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when companies will be required to identify the amount of non-audit fees paid to directors.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the power in section 390B of the Companies Act 1985, inserted into that Act by section 121 of the Companies Act 1989, to make regulations requiring the disclosure of non-audit fees paid to auditors or their associates. The Department is currently consulting interested parties on the drafting of the regulations.

Environment Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he, or officials of his Department, have been invited to participate in the conference on environmental opportunities and market forecast organised by the Environment Council in London on 15-16 November.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 October 1990]: I am pleased to report that a speaker from my Department's research agency, Warren Spring Laboratory, will be present at this conference.

Enterprise Initiative

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is considering extending the enterprise initiative to companies with more than 50 employees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 29 October 1990]: The consultancy initiatives are already available to independent firms and members of groups of under 500 employees. There are no plans to extend the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) to firms of over 50 employees, but the number of awards has been increased this year from 150 to 180.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is considering extending the length of the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 29 October 1990]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 9 October, the consultancy initiatives are to be extended for a final three years from 1 April 1991.

EC Assistance

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the European Commission with a view to developing new schemes of assistance for industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 29 October 1990]: I have had no discussions with the European Commission on this matter.

Company Research Projects

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of any proposed new schemes for the financial support of single company research projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 29 October 1990]: I have reviewed recently our support of research and development for small and medium-sized enterprises. As a result we plan to announce, early in the new year, a scheme to provide support for single companies for product and process development. At present, I am unable to give further details as the operation of the scheme has still to be agreed and European Commission approval obtained.

Business Academic Links

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to improve links between business and the academic community.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 29 October 1990]: My Department actively promotes links between business and academia by providing advice and financial support, and funding up to half the eligible costs of approved collaborative research projects between academic institutions and industry under schemes such as LINK, the advanced technology programmes, and general industrial collaborative projects.

We also support such links through the teaching company scheme which enables graduates to work in industry under joint supervision of a company and an academic; through the national electronics research initiative, which encourages secondment of employees to centres of research excellence at universities and Government research establishments; and through support for a network of regional technology centres (RTCs) which give firms access to technical expertise in universities and polytechnics. The Secretary of State plans to introduce a programme to strengthen RTCs acting as intermediaries between the science base and small and medium-sized firms. Government also provide support for science parks at universities and polytechnics and for interdisciplinary research centres staffed by teams of scientists and people seconded from industry.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a breakdown of inward investment in the United Kingdom by standard English region and for Scotland and Wales for each year since 1974, showing the amount received in each region as a proportion of the total in each year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: These figures are available only from 1979. However, the tables sets out the number of investment decisions known to the Invest in Britain Bureau for the calendar years 1979 to 1989 and the associated jobs for the United Kingdom by region. Comparable information on the total level of financial investment by inward investors is not available.

The decisions recorded include the establishment of new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and take no account of subsequent developments.

ENERGY

Non-nuclear Energy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement in respect of what non-nuclear applications for energy he will be financing in 1994.

Mr. Moynihan: My expectation is that the general coverage of my Department's research, development and demonstration work will remain broadly similar to that at present. It is not possible, however, at this time, to be more specific about the detail of individual programmes.

Wave Energy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on what date he will conclude his review of Professor Stephen Salter's nodding duck device to produce electricity from wave power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The wave energy review now in progress is examining the prospects for wave energy in the United Kingdom across the whole range from shoreline to large-scale offshore devices. When the work has been completed, including collection of some additional wave energy data, a final report will be published in 1991.

The review is being conducted in stages. Two progress reports have already been circulated for comment to the wave research and development community and have also been placed in the Library of the House.

It is intended that an interim report will be published early in 1991. This interim report will address offshore wave energy including progress on the assessment of Professor Salter's nodding duck device.

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research has been carried out over the last 10 years on obtaining energy from wave power; what is currently being carried on; how long those programmes will last; and what costs are involved.

Mr. Moynihan: A major programme of wave energy research and development funded by the Department of Energy was carried out from 1974 to 1983 and cost approximately £15·5 million. The programme is described in ETSU R26, published in March 1985. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Since 1983, wave energy research has focused on near-shore and small-scale shoreline devices. On the island of Islay in Scotland, a project funded by the Department is currently being carried out by Queen's university, Belfast to construct and monitor an experimental oscillating water column shoreline device. Queen's university is also carrying out a survey funded by the Department to assess the near-shore and shoreline wave energy resource.

In addition the Department is updating its earlier wave energy studies and a review is now in hand to examine the prospects for wave energy across the whole range from shoreline to large-scale offshore devices. Two progress reports have already been circulated for comment to the wave research and development community and have also been placed in the Library of the House. It is intended that an interim report will be published early in 1991 and a final report published later that year.

The Department will re-examine its policy on wave energy research and development in the light of the results of the review.

Total funding by the Department since 1983, including committed expenditure, for the Islay project, wave energy surveys, work in support of the review and other wave energy work has amounted to about £2·5 million.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he exects to receive the report of the Cullen inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes) on 22 October 1990, at column 16.

Research and Development

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, for the current financial year, a breakdown of the money his Department is spending on research and development.

Mr. Moynihan: The supply estimates 1990-91, class V, vote 2, Department of Energy research and development and industrial support, set out the Department's provision for R and D expenditure by programme, as follows:

	£ million
Nuclear R and D	128·886
Energy Efficiency R and D	10·990
Oil and gas production technology	3·660
Safety in offshore oil and gas operations	6·973
Enhanced oil recovery	0·650
Coal based energy	7·603
Renewables	20·330

Final outturn expenditure may differ in some detailed respects from these figures.

Offshore Oil (Accidents)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date, and by location, the number of offshore oil workers who have (a) lost their lives and (b) been injured during their employment in the offshore oil fields around the coast of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: The number of fatalities and serious accidents, injuries to persons, on or near to offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf reported to my Department from 1980 to September 1990 are as follows:

	Fatalities	Serious Accidents
1980	4	45
1981	6	59
1982	14	39
1983	10	47
1984	13	59
1985	8	103
1986	3	101
1987	6	59
1988	[1]173	[2]85
1989	3	85
[3][5]1990	[4]10	52

[1] 167 relate to Piper Alpha.
[2] Includes 11 of the 61 Piper Alpha survivors.
[3] Provisional.
[4] Six relate to the helicopter crash on the Brent Spar.
[5] January-September.

Information on the location of these incidents could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

National Power

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy with which countries National Power refuses to trade.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions on countries with which to do business are a commercial matter for National Power.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the refusal of National Power to trade with Israel.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 26 October at column 338.

Energy Conservation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to increase the level of Government funding for (a) renewable energy, (b) energy conservation and (c) energy efficiency.

Mr. Baldry: The Department of Energy's expenditure plans for the next three years are currently being reviewed in the Public Expenditure Survey. A statement on the outcome of the survey will be made shortly. It is our policy to seek to ensure that all economic and environmentally acceptable energy sources should be exploited fully.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the payment to Universal Studios for alleged breach of copyright in respect of the similarity between Frank N. Stein and the character Herman Munster.

Mr. Baldry: The only representation received by the Secretary of State was correspondence from Bridge Wolsey, a firm of solicitors. This representation has been referred to the Department of Trade and Industry.

Renewable Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the financial or other resource contributions made by his Department to renewable energy research undertaken at (a) the Centre for Alternative Technology near Machynlleth and (b) the Centre of Solar Energy at University college, Cardiff; and whether he has any plans to increase contributions to these centres.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department has a substantial programme to promote the use of renewable energy. However, we have not funded any research at the centre for alternative energy nor at the centre of solar energy at University college, Cardiff.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the first non-fossil fuel obligation order for renewables came into force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The first order for renewables under the non-fossil fuel obligation came into force on 29 September 1990.

The order was set in accordance with advice from the Director General of Electricity Supply and specifies the initial levels of renewables-sourced electricity generating capacity that the 12 regional electricity companies in England and Wales are required to have available from 1 October 1990 until 31 December 1998. They will build up to 102·25 MW declared net capacity at April 1995.

As a result of this order, 75 projects have been contracted by the 12 regional electricity companies and have been approved by the Director General of Electricity Supply as meeting the requirements of the Electricity Act 1989. If these projects come to fruition they will total a declared net capacity of 152·1 MW.

Over half the 75 projects are new projects, which would not have proceeded without the benefit of the above market price available under the non-fossil fuel obligation.

The 75 projects are made up of 25 landfill gas, 26 hydro, eight bio-gas, seven waste incineration and nine wind.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists, Leicestershire

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the current waiting list for each specialty in Leicestershire health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table. The number of patients waiting for treatment is not a relevant measure of the quality of service provided. It is the length of time that patients wait that matters, and the number of patients waiting over a year in Leicestershire district health authority has fallen by over 60 per cent. from 2,800 in March 1979 to 1,100 in March 1990. In addition, the number of patients treated in this district has risen by nearly 49 per cent. between 1979 and 1990 from 74,000 to 110,000. The total waiting list also reduced over the same period, from 10,777 to 9,098. The total number waiting in March 1990 therefore represented on average four weeks' work in hand, compared with the eight weeks' work represented by the total list in March 1979.

HIV

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information he has on the percentage of pregnant women in England who are HIV-positive.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest published information on the percentage of pregnant women in England who are HIV seropositive is based on a study of the prevalence of infection in newborn babies. The work was published in the Lancet on 3 March 1990. A total of 114,515 babies born in North East Thames, North West Thames and South West Thames were tested.

Of the babies born in inner London, 0·49 per 1000 showed evidence of maternal infection. For outer London the rate was 0·33 per 1000, and for babies born outside London the rate was 0·04 per 1000. The overall rate was 0·24 per 1000.

Further information will become available in 1991 from the unlinked anonymous HIV prevalence monitoring programme, which will include samples from 120,000 women attending ante-natal clinics in 40 health districts.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will extend the list of those entitled to free national health service prescriptions to include those suffering from serious mental illness.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. As the result of the present wide-ranging exemption arrangements, over 75 per cent. of all items dispensed in the NHS are provided free. Many patients with mental illness benefit from these arrangements. Those who are not exempt but who need a lot of medication can save money by buying prescription prepayment certificates, or season tickets. Those certificates can lead to significant savings for anyone needing more than 14 items in a year or five items in a four-month period.

To extend the exemption arrangements for all patients who suffer from mental illness would benefit only those whose resources exceed the qualifying threshold for help on low income grounds and would not make the best use of the resources available to the NHS.

Elderly Mentally Ill People

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost to his Department of the evaluation of three experimental units for elderly mentally ill people at High Wycombe, Liverpool and Hertford conducted by a team from the university of Liverpool under the leadership of Professor Copeland between 1984 and March 1990; and whether the team's report is yet available.

Mr. Dorrell: The total cost of the evaluation was £305,405. Professor Copeland has undertaken to deliver the final report in November.

Hospital Trusts

Sir Cyril Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent he proposes to answer parliamentary questions about hospitals which acquire trust status.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: NHS trusts will remain an integral part of the national health service. We shall continue to answer questions on all national health service matters to the extent that information is available centrally. Hon. Members should continue to look in the first instance to the chairmen of regional, district and family health service authorities for information about day-to-day local management issues in all directly managed NHS hospitals and units. In future, they should look in the first instance to the chairmen of NHS trusts for similar information about self-governing units.

Eggs

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of food poisoning outbreaks has been traced back to eggs in the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: In the first 39 weeks of 1990, 616 outbreaks of salmonellosis were reported to the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre. Of the 71 in which a vehicle was specified, 33 or 46 per cent. included egg or egg products.

Company Cars

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the district health authorities throughout England which are now providing cars for their district managers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not collect this information centrally.

Confidential Files

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recommendations he has made to local authorities on the disclosure of confidential social services files to the person to whom they relate since the Graham Gaskin case.

Mr. Dorrell: The implications of the decision of the European Court of Human Rights in Mr. Graham Gaskin's case are being studied. The need for any further guidance to local authorities on disclosure of personal social services records will be determined when the study is completed.

VAT

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional capital provision will be made to the national health service in the current year to reflect the cessation of value added tax refunds on construction work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1990-91 £160 million additional funding is being made available to the NHS to compensate for the termination from 1 April 1990 of refunds of VAT paid on construction work and for other minor capital expenditure.

North East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the capital allocations from his Department and the total capital spending by the North East Thames regional health authority per year for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Capital allocations £ millions	Expenditure £ millions
1980-81	38·267	48·652
1981-82	46·615	51·592
1982-83	49·798	56·016
1983-84	51·005	61·600
1984-85	54·577	66·652
1985-86	55·372	65·932
1986-87	55·920	75·904
1987-88	69·407	92·794
1988-89	70·350	121·074
1989-90	80·423	[1]120·070

All figures at cash prices.

The allocation figures do not include sums generated through land sales or other capital income, other than as a result of brokerage, nor do they take account of virement from revenue to capital or vice versa.

Nephrologists

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of nephrologists employed in the national health service now, in 1985 and in 1980; and what is the ratio of nephrologists to kidney patients for those three dates.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. The number of consultant nephrologists in post in England in 1989, the latest year for which information is available, was 69. The figures for 1985 and 1980 were 69 and 63 respectively. This does not take account of other physicians who have an interest in nephrology. The available information indicates that in 1989 in England and Wales there were 53 other consultants who registered nephrology as a second speciality compared with 45 in 1988.

According to data reported to the European Dialysis and Transplant Association the number of patients in the United Kingdom being treated for end stage renal failure at the end of the years 1988—the latest year for which information is available—1985 and 1980 were 16,155, 12,154 and 7,146 respectively.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to see the changes in law and practice which reflect the recent experiment in Coventry in regard to drink-related anti-social practice brought into effect; and what action he plans to take in regard to this matter.

Mr. John Patten: The results of the byelaw which prohibits the consumption of alcohol in designated areas have been carefully monitored by the Home Office and the local authorities concerned. The effectiveness of the byelaw has been demonstrated sufficiently for it to be made generally available subject to applicant authorities satisfying themselves as to local need and police capacity to enforce it. We will be writing to local authority chief executives next month inviting them to consider applying for the byelaw.

Overseas Voters

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest date that an application can be accepted by an electoral registration officer for an overseas voter to be included on the electoral roll effective from 15 February 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Overseas electors' declarations must be made on or before 10 October but, as with returns from domestic electors, need not necessarily be received by the electoral registration officer by that date: they may be treated as claims for inclusion in the draft register or, depending on when they are received, for inclusion in the published register.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of overseas electors applications received by the electoral registration officer in each parliamentary constituency as at 10 October.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

African Immigrants

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the arrival at Heathrow airport of immigrant minors from Ethiopia and adjacent African countries; what criteria are being operated regarding their admission; what inquiries are being made for financing their travel to the United Kingdom; and what accommodation is available for them and at whose expense.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not record separately the entry to the United Kingdom of minors from Ethiopia or other countries. Their entry is governed by the immigration rules. Under the rules, minors with no support or accommodation to go to would be liable to refusal. If such minors sought asylum it would be necessary to consider their claims to refugee status under the 1951 United Nations convention before a refusal decision could be taken. In fact, very few unaccompanied children seek asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom. We assume that the Ethiopian children whose cases have been publicised recently entered the United Kingdom in another capacity, for example, visiting with an accompanying adult, before being abandoned. We have seen no evidence of organised abuse in arrangements for travel or entry to this country. The statutory responsibility for the care of any child in this country without adult support rests with local authorities.

Food Sabotage

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the number of incidents of food sabotage to food manufacturing and retail outlets in 1990; whether any injuries to persons resulted; and whether any information is available on the number of companies that have given way to this form of blackmail.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that so far this year there have been two confirmed incidents of malicious contamination of a food product linked to an extortion threat. No injuries resulted and the police have no evidence of any companies having given way to such extortion threats.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the publications now available which explain the management changes being introduced in prisons in England and Wales; how hon. Members can obtain copies of such documents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The joint prison service/PA Consultants report which recommended changes in the management of the service at above establishment level was published on 10 August 1989 and copies were placed in the Library. We announced our acceptance of those recommendations on 11 January 1990. Since then the changes have been published throughout the prison service and the wider Home Office by in-house newsletters named "Briefing" and "Update". I am arranging for copies of the relevant issues of both publications to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how resources are to be provided to ensure that the best results are obtained from management changes now being introduced in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The recent management changes introduced into the prison service have been at above establishment level and have involved the closure of regional offices and the introduction of area managers based in headquarters but spending a great deal of time in their prisons. Care has been taken to ensure that the necessary resources have followed the introduction of the new management features following the reorganisation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the new London prison of Belmarsh is to be opened; how the prison is to be staffed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The proposed date for the opening of Belmarsh is April 1991. There will be a phased introduction of the work during the remainder of the year.

Belmarsh will be staffed by a mixture of experienced staff who have applied to go there, new entrant prison officers on their first posting and those staff invited to take up post at Belmarsh on promotion.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the medical facilities to be provided at the new London prison Belmarsh; what will be the staffing levels and their position; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Belmarsh will have a fully equipped medical centre with 74 beds for in-patients in single rooms and six small wards. The medical team will be led by a senior medical officer who is already in post. The remainder of the medical complement has yet to be decided. The doctors will be supported by a health care team of 69 comprising hospital officers and civilian nurses in about equal proportions and in a range of grades under a governor IV.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the last prison food rations price review took place; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The ration scale in prisons is expressed in terms of weight or volume, not price. Movements in prices do not therefore affect the amount of main food items available for inmates.

Cash allowances for dietary extras, which in total constitute less than 10 per cent. of the total spent on food items, are reviewed each autumn. This year's review is just being completed and revised cash allowances will be promulgated shortly to become effective from 29 November.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether local prison governors are allowed to transfer surplus funding not used on one listed expenditure to another item of expenditure within the same prison; and if he will make a statement on his present policy on local prison expenditure.

Mrs. Rumbold: I will write to the hon. Member.

Prison Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department on helping the families of a serving prison officer who dies, who are living in prison accommodation, to ensure that accommodation continues to be available to the family; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We cannot undertake to provide accommodation for widows of deceased prison officers, but we treat such cases sympathetically and do not enforce eviction until we are satisfied that they have obtained alternative accommodation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of new prison officers received into the prison services in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the last three years the recruitment and training of new prison officers has reached unprecedented levels. The number of new prison officers posted to establishments in each of these years was:

	Number
1987-88	1,644
1988-89	2,372
1989-90	1,555

Of those officers 3,321 were recruited for the opening of new accommodation for inmates and to meet in full management's commitment under the "fresh start" framework agreement; and 2,270 were recruited to replace wastage.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to require the electoral register to include postal codes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Prisoners (Sickness)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) sickness rates and (b) long-term sickness rates, that is more than one month, for each prison in the United Kingdom for each quarter year for the two previous years before "fresh start" was implemented and the subsequent years.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Parole

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans his Department has to tighten security measures when prisoners are allowed out on parole;

(2) how many (a) life and (b) other prisoners have escaped while out of prison on parole for the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the temporary release of prisoners under rule 6 of the prison rules. In the period 1 October 1989 to 30 September 1990 there were 1,381 recorded instances in which an inmate failed to return on time from a period of temporary release. Separate figures are not available for those prisoners serving sentences of life imprisonment and those serving determinate sentences. The arrangements governing temporary release are under review.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the grounds on which life prisoners can obtain parole.

Mrs. Rumbold: Life sentence prisoners are not eligible for parole, but may be granted temporary release and escorted absences to test them under conditions of trust and responsibility and facilitate their eventual resettlement and reintegration into society. Those with provisional release dates and those in open prisons are generally eligible, as, on a highly selective basis, are some life sentence prisoners in category C prisons who have made good progress during their sentence and where the risks are judged to be acceptably low.

Broadcasting Bill

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Elderpark housing association about amendments to the Broadcasting Bill; and what replies he has sent.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

The Home Office replied to the letter of 10 October from the director of Elderpark housing association on 26 October. I have today sent the hon. Member a copy of that reply.

Police Interviews

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police force and by location those police stations that are now equipped with recording machines, so that police interviews with suspects can be recorded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Violent Crime

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for crimes of violence and the percentage difference since 1978.

Mr. John Patten: Information on notifiable offences of violent crime—violence against the person, sexual offences and robbery—is published in tables 2.8 to 2.10 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1988", Cm 847 and in table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 31/90; copies of these publications are available in the Library. Between 1978 and the 12 months to June 1990 violent crime approximately doubled and represents only 6 per cent. of total recorded crime, similar to the proportion in 1978.

Kingston Prison, Portsmouth

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to review security arrangements at Her Majesty's prison Kingston (Portsmouth), following the escape of John Gary Hilton on 6 October.

Mrs. Rumbold: An immediate review of security arrangements was carried out by the governor of Her Majesty's prison Kingston, Portsmouth following the escape of this prisoner on 6 October 1990. Immediate action was taken to improve the security of the establishment. In addition, a longer-term review of security arrangements is currently being carried out which will include the type of prisoner allocated to the establishment, the overall security of the buildings, the day and night staffing levels and the suitability of the current regime for the present population.

Ticket Touts

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration his Department is giving to counteracting the problem of ticket touts at sporting or entertainment events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 23 October 1990]: Lord Justice Taylor has recommended that there should be a new criminal offence to meet the specific problem of ticket touting at football matches. We have not yet reached any final decision, but we see great force in his argument that touting at football matches can have particularly grave implications for public order and public safety and therefore deserves special treatment.

More generally, although touting may be considered offensive, we doubt that it warrants prohibition. The tout will normally simply exploit unsatisfied demand for tickets, without misrepresenting their face value. The more objectionable aspects of touting are already covered by the criminal law, and promoters of events can take their own steps to deter it. For example, the organisers of the Ryder cup, by attaching conditions to tickets, were able to use the criminal and civil law to impede touting. Similar provisions have now been adopted for the Wimbledon championships by the All England Club, and we wish it every success with the scheme.

Political Asylum

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of persons presently residing in the United Kingdom together with their country of origin, who are seeking political asylum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The available information is given in the following table:

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications were received for political asylum in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and how many were granted.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: Information is given in the following table:

Applications[1] for refugee status in the United Kingdom, and grants[1] [2] of asylum and exceptional leave, in the 12 months ending 30 September 1990.

	Number
Applications received	20,400

[2] Grants do not necessarily relate to applications made in this period.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average delay in processing an application for political asylum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an asylum application and the decision, for cases decided in the third quarter of 1990, was thirteen and a half months.

Security

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: Sixty-three people have died in Northern Ireland this year as a result of the security situation; 40 were civilians, nine members of the RUC or RUC reserve, and 14 members of the armed forces. Up to 31 July 1990, 250 had been charged with terrorist-type offences including six for murder and 42 for attempted murder, and 267 had been convicted of terrorist-type offences, including two for murder and 20 for attempted murder.

Undergraduates

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many undergraduates from Great Britain have enrolled at (a) the university of Ulster and (b) the Queen's university of Belfast in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	University of Ulster	Queen's University of Belfast
1985-86	682	85

Mr. Needham: Eighteen members have been appointed as board representatives to boards of governors of schools and governing bodies of further education institutions. All 18 have been appointed as governors of five schools, and in addition two have been appointed to two FE institutions and 16 to one FE institution. None has been appointed to more than 10 schools or institutions.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many action for community employment schemes have had funding withdrawn under the terms of the directive of 22 June 1985; on what dates funding was withdrawn; and on what dates funding was restored subsequently in those cases where this occurred.

Mr. Needham: Funding has been withdrawn from 11 ACE projects in accordance with the Government's policy as set out in the parliamentary answer on 27 June 1985 by the then Secretary of State. The dates of notification of withdrawal were: 27 June 1985; 25 November 1985; 31 January 1986; 21 March 1986; 20 February 1987; 31 March 1987 (two cases); 31 August 1987; 30 November 1989; and 23 August 1990. Funding was subsequently restored in one case notified on 22 July 1986. Initial applications for ACE funding were rejected in three further cases on the following dates: 27 March 1986; 8 May 1986; 10 March 1987.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

87. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made through the chemical weapons convention in achieving a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on the production, possession and use of all chemical weapons.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There was some progress on technical and legal issues during the summer session of the conference on disarmament in Geneva for a comprehensive chemical weapons convention. But a number of key issues remain to be resolved, particularly effective verification. The United Kingdom report on our programme of practice challenge inspections, which my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs presented to the conference on disarmament in July, was well received.

Environmental Treaties

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those international treaties, agreements and protocols covering environmental matters to which the United Kingdom is a signatory.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office treaty index contains details of over 10,000 international treaties, agreements and protocols, many of which have environmental implications. The United Nations environment programme recorded in 1989 140 major treaties and other agreements directly concerned with the environment.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage seismic surveys and development of the oil industry in the Falkland Islands area.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each international visit which he has undertaken since 26 July indicating, in each case, the purpose, the matters discussed and the estimated cost of each visit.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has paid official visits to the following countries since 26 July 1990:

Iraq and Kuwait

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 19 October, Official Report, column 968, on the number of British citizens presently in Iraq and Kuwait, what information he has on how many of them have their permanent home in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: From the information available it is not possible to say how many British citizens in Iraq and Kuwait have their permanent homes in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what media resources, through the BBC or otherwise, are available to the residents of the Iraq and Kuwait areas to ensure that accurate information is available to them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Iraqi media are strictly controlled. However, residents of Iraq and Kuwait can receive broadcasts by the BBC World Service in Arabic —extended from 9 to 10·5 hours a day from 2 August— and English—extended from 18·5 to 24 hours a day from 8 August. English broadcasts now include the daily half-hour Gulf link programme for relatives to send messages to British people trapped in Iraq and Kuwait. Other international broadcasters, including Voice of America, are also audible. Unsuccessful attempts were made to jam BBC and VOA Arabic transmissions, but those attempts ceased on 12 October.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the telephone charges incurred through communications with relatives of those people currently being held in Iraq and Kuwait to be met by the embassies; if he will list those countries which meet these costs for their nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Iraqi authorities do not allow detainees in Iraq and Kuwait to make telephone calls. Families in Britain have been advised to stay in touch with the Foreign Office gulf families support centre which will call them immediately there is any news of those held in Iraq and Kuwait. We are also providing a toll-free service giving general information about the crisis. Other countries have made similar arrangements. We do not have full details.

Antarctica

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his present policy towards ratification of the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities following the decision by Australia, France and New Zealand that they are no longer prepared to support the convention.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 25 October, at column 266.

African Immigrants

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requirement there is for visas for unaccompanied immigrant minors travelling to the United Kingdom from Ethiopia and adjacent African countries; and what information he has on the number of such immigrants permitted to travel during the last 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All immigrant minors from Ethiopia and adjacent African countries are required to obtain entry clearance before their arrival in the United Kingdom from a British visa issuing office. Entry clearance takes the form of a visa for nationals of Ethiopia, Somalia, Djibouti and Sudan and an entry certificate for those of Uganda and Kenya. Information on the number of such entry clearances issued is not kept according to the age of the applicant.

Al-Agsa Mosque (Killings)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the text of his initial condemnation of the killings on 8 October outside the Al-Agsa mosque of 21 Palestinians.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An FCO spokesman said on 8 October:

"We do not yet have all the facts. But we are deeply shocked by the extent of the violence. We appeal to the Israeli authorities and to the Palestinian leaders to do all that they can to restore calm in this highly volatile situation. This dreadful incident demonstrates yet again the need for Israelis and Palestinians to begin the dialogue which is the essential first step for the negotiation of peace and security in the region".

We joined our EC partners in making a further statement on 9 October which strongly deplored the use of excessive force by Israeli forces.

Military Training

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has had any contact with British companies involved in the provision of military training to foreign military forces.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received a few inquiries of a preliminary nature from British companies in recent years.

Mr. Chope: Consultants have not yet been appointed. I will invite competitive offers from selected firms on 7 November.

Trust Ports

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the trust ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are over 100 trust ports, but only 23 had a turnover of more than £1 million in 1989. These are: London, Dover, Tees and Hartlepool, Medway, Forth, Tyne, Ipswich, Clyde, Harwich Haven, Aberdeen, Belfast, Milford Haven, Poole, Lerwick, Blyth, Dundee, Great Yarmouth, Shoreham, Peterhead, Cromarty, Montrose, Warrenpoint and Londonderry.

Heavy Goods Lorries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the last 12 months such information as is available to him on the results of the spot checks made by police that have been carried out on heavy goods lorries travelling through the three counties of Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Chope: The following information is provided from road checks carried out by this Department's traffic examiners and vehicle examiners with the support of the police and includes those vehicles checked in the ferry ports in the north-east.

	Number
Traffic examiners
HGVs examined	48,777
HGVs weighed	17,514
Tachograph charts screened	247,414
Prohibitions issued	1,075
Prosecutions	1,980
Vehicle examiners
Vehicles examined	19,509
Immediate prohibitions	833
Delayed prohibitions	1,069

These figures are for the north-eastern traffic area which includes the three counties of Yorkshire and Humberside and cover the period for 12 months up to 31 March 1990.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date the number of tonnes of radioactive waste that has been (a) imported and (b) exported through the ports of (i) Barrow, (ii) Heysham and (iii) Workington;

(2) what equipment is employed currently at (a) Barrow, (b) Heysham and (c) Workington for the handling of radioactive waste; and whether this is to be upgraded within the next five years;

(3) if he will list by year for the last 10 years the amount of radioactive waste imported from (a) the United States of America, (b) France, (c) Japan, (d) Sweden, (e) West Germany, (f) Switzerland, (g) Belgium, (h) the Netherlands, (i) Finland, (j) Italy and (k) other countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: Radioactive waste is not imported into this country.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by (a) description, (b) application and (c) maximum external dimensions, the standard waste containers for transportation of (i) low-level waste, (ii) intermediate-level waste and (iii) high-level waste; and if he will show in his answer the recommended means of transport for each category.

Mr. McLoughlin: At present only low and intermediate-level radioactive waste is transported. Containers, of which there are many types, are designed, tested and used in accordance with national and international regulations and where appropriate certified by my Department as complying with the regulations. Safety appropriate to the nature and quantity of the material carried is required to be "built in" to the design, and can normally be carried by all modes of transport.

Data on individual containers are matters for the designers of such containers.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvement plans are under review for trunk roads, including bypasses for (a) Thursby, (b) Wigton, (c) Egremont and (d) the approaches to Barrow; and if he will show in his answer the estimated (i) cost and (ii) timescale.

Mr. Chope: The answers are as follows:

(a) Thursby bypass was completed in 1987 at a cost of £1·7 million.

(b) Wigton bypass (estimated cost £6·4 million); and

(c) Egremont bypass (estimated cost £10·0 million), are both in preparation and I hope works will start in 1991-92.

(d) Schemes in the programme for the A590 to Barrow are:

Ulverston-Dalton bypass (£12·8 million. Next stage—preferred route.

High and Low Newton bypass (£17·1 million). Next stage—publication of draft orders.

Dalton bypass (£11·7 million). Next stage—tender invitation.

Light Aircraft

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions exist for making compulsory the holding of insurance cover for passengers and public by pilots of light aircraft used both for business and private purposes.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is at present no legislative provision requiring pilots of light aircraft to hold insurance cover.

M4-A4 Corridor

Mr. Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the final report on the M4-A4 corridor study from his consultants, Howard Humphreys and Partners Ltd.; and when he intends to publish it.

Mr. Chope: The consultants are now preparing their final report on this study. I expect to receive this report early in the new year and to publish it as soon after that as possible.

Stockport Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to hold the next public inquiry into the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Chope: Early 1992.

Shard Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the annual traffic flows across the Shard bridge in each of the past five years.

Mr. Chope: The information is:

1986	11,100	4,050,000
1987	10,051	3,670,000
1988	10,226	3,730,000

[1]Based on September counts.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received from Lancashire county council for a bridge at or near Shard bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The council has submitted statutory orders for a replacement bridge which require confirmation by my right hon. Friend. A public inquiry is to be held into an objection.

The council has asked for transport supplementary grant support next financial year towards the cost of the replacement bridge and has given it fifth priority in its list of bids for new schemes. A decision will be announced soon.

Small Businesses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to carry out research into the type of freight provision needed by small businesses.

Mr. Chope: No. Customers of freight services have the freedom to choose, in a highly competitive market, the service best suited to their needs: and the freight industry has shown itself well capable of responding to the requirements of it customers.

Railway Property (Deaths and Injuries)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many deaths and injuries to children and young people have been recorded as taking place on British Railway property in each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: The following table shows the number of children under the age of 16 killed or injured while trespassing on BR property. No information is available on child deaths and injuries sustained in other accidents on BR premises.

	Deaths	Injuries
1987	14	19
1988	16	[2]23
1989[1]	7	[2]17

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 10 May 1990, Official Report, Vol. 172, c. 216.

Traffic Lights

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the use of cameras at busy junctions to catch motorists who jump red traffic lights.

Mr. Chope: In the White Paper "The Road User and the Law" (CMD 576) we accepted in principle the use of cameras to detect speeding and traffic light offences. Legislation to allow for more effective use of such equipment will be introduced at the earliest opportunity.

Trains, Merseyside

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the number, and (b) the proportion of the total number this represents, of the trains that did not run in the Merseyside passenger transport authority area of the number specified by the authority under section 20 during the financial year 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the Merseyside passenger transport executive and British Rail; we do not have detailed statistics on the services which British Rail runs on behalf of the passenger transport executives.

Passenger Transport Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the general position relating to the existence of possible mechanisms under section 20 for the withholding of funds by passenger transport authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 provides for passenger transport executives to enter into agreements with British Rail for the provision of local rail services. The terms of the agreements are for the parties to determine. The present agreements provide for the PTEs to withhold a percentage of claims by British Rail in certain circumstances. The general law of contract also applies.

A595, West Cumbria

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about improvements to the A595 in west Cumbria in view of the increased traffic generated by the construction of Thorp.

Mr. Chope: The current roads programme already includes a number of major improvement schemes for the A595 in west Cumbria.

Port of London Authority

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 24 October to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing), Official Report, column 190, under what powers the Port of London Authority employs its police force; if he envisages that the new owners of the Tilbury undertaking will be afforded similar powers; and what consultations he has had with the representatives of the members of the Port of London police about the implications for their employment and welfare of his decision outlined in that answer.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Port of London Authority currently has powers to appoint constables under section 154 of the Port of London Act 1968. As I indicated in my answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing), it is too early to be precise about the division of activities and responsibilities after the Tilbury undertaking has been sold into private ownership. Future employment and welfare conditions for members of the PLA police force are matters for negotiation between the PLA Police Federation and the authority itself.

Vehicles (Pollution Control)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under which circumstances computer records of vehicle ownership could be made available to pollution control agencies in order to aid the detection of smoky or noisy vehicles.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 October 1990]: Names and addresses of vehicle keepers held by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency are freely available to the police and are given to local authorities and other enforcement agencies which request them for purposes connected with the investigation of an offence.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department will co-operate with the pilot schemes for the reporting of smoking vehicles by the public to environmental health departments in Kirklees and Derby.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 October 1990]: The Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency is co-operating with Derby council. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency will be pleased to co-operate with Kirklees metropolitan council.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on environmental protection and pollution abatement policies introduced by his Department since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 25 October 1990]: Since 1979 the Department of Transport has been working hard to protect the environment across the whole range of transport activities. Following are some examples:

Public Transport: We are encouraging public transport so that individuals have an alternative to using cars. We are supporting massive investment in rail—£3·7 billion in British Rail and £2·2 billion in London Transport over this financial year and the next two. We are prepared to consider grants for light rail schemes in appropriate cases.

The £120 million first phase of the Manchester light rapid transit scheme has been approved, with substantial Exchequer grant. The traffic management and parking proposals for London, including the development of red routes, will help buses to provide better and more reliable services. Between 1985-86, when local bus services were deregulated, and 1988-89 local bus mileage increased by 16 per cent. in Great Britain.

Traffic Management: We have a wide-ranging programme of research and development to improve the techniques of urban traffic management and parking control. This includes work on the provision of better facilities for pedestrians, pedal cyclists and bus operations, more sophisticated systems for co-ordinating traffic lights to prevent congestion and more effective techniques for charging for parking and enforcing waiting restrictions.

Roads: We have built over a hundred bypasses since 1979 which have provided much-needed relief to local communities. We have developed methods of environmental appraisal of roads which anticipated by several years the European Community directive on environmental impact assessment. We have developed the use of indigenous species for the plating and screening of roads. The Department of Transport already plants over 2 million trees each year and this number is set to increase substantially. We have started the funding of English heritage for rescue archaeology. We have appointed consultants to advise on the best landscape and environmental practice on schemes for motorway widening and new trunk roads, and intend also to improve the landscape and appearance of existing roads, especially in urban areas.

Lead in Petrol: We have introduced regulations to reduce the maximum permitted lead content of leaded petrol by two thirds. We have successfully urged the EC to introduce unleaded petrol, which has been generally available in this country for some years now. Encouraged by the increasing duty differentials in its favour, well over one third of all petrol sold in this country is now unleaded. This proportion should continue to climb steadily, as new cars must now be able to run on unleaded petrol.

Vehicle Emissions: We have participated actively in discussions within the EC about controls on vehicle emissions and vehicle noise. These discussions have led to the adoption of much stricter gaseous emission standards for cars in recent years. We are now pressing for the strictest standards being proposed anywhere in the world for gaseous and particular emissions from goods vehicles and buses. As part of the Government's strategy to encourage motorists to seek greater fuel economy, we have already decided to issue better guidance to drivers and to take measures to enforce speed limits more effectively. The proposed emissions check in the MOT test will also have benefits in terms of fuel economy. Noise limits are also much stricter. The noise a new heavy lorry is permitted to make now is roughly half the level permitted in 1980.

Road Freight: We have pressed hard within the EC for the lifting of restrictions on road freight cabotage to reduce the need for empty running. Since July 1990 cabotage has been allowed for the first time under special permits. We shall now press for full cabotage liberalisation. The introduction in 1983 of increased lorry weights from 32 to 38 tonnes has saved 10,000 lorries and reduced lorry traffic by 530 million miles. Since 1979 we have paid £53 million under the freight facilities grant scheme to encourage the transfer of freight from road to rail or water in cases where the commercial decision would have been to use road, but where the transfer has offered environmental benefits. During this period we estimate that, as a result of these grants, over 2·5 million lorry journeys a year have been saved.

Aviation: We have banned older subsonic civil jet aircraft which fail to meet minimum international noise standards and are now in the vanguard of moves to phase out the next noisiest category of aircraft. We have already banned the addition of these types to the United Kingdom register from 1 November 1990. In addition, we ensure that good noise reduction measures are employed at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted, the three airports where we have direct responsibility for noise from aircraft landing and taking off. These measures include noise preferential routes, noise insulation grants and night restrictions. We have also implemented international emission standards for aero-engines covering unburnt hydrocarbons, smoke and vented fuel. We are active in international discussions looking at reducing emissions still further.

Shipping: We take an active part in the development and implementation of international marine pollution prevention regulations. Since 1979 we have implemented regulations to reduce the pollution of the sea by oil, noxious liquid substances and garbage. Regulations to control pollution by packaged dangerous goods will shortly enter into force. We are now looking at atmospheric pollution by ships' engine exhaust gas emissions, ozone layer-depleting agents, incineration of dangerous chemical wastes and gas emissions from cargoes. We are also pressing for the liberalisation of shipping cabotage throughout the Community. This will give shipping greater opportunities to compete more successfully with other transport modes, with the consequent environmental benefits that such a transfer of freight will bring. It will also allow ship owners to make the fullest use of their vessels while operating throughout the Community.

Motorway Closures

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements were made to advise southbound motorists that the motorway was closed at junction 11 following the closure of the M1 on Tuesday 23 October; what steps were taken to advise motorists to leave the motorway before junction 11; what measures were available to the police to locate and assist motorists during their delay; how long the motorway was closed; what guidelines his Department has issued to cover the emergency closures of motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Following the accident on the southbound carriageway of the M1 near junction 9, Bedfordshire on 23 October police set up diversions using pre-determined routes along the A505 and A5 for HGVs and the A1081 for lighter vehicles. The carriageway was closed for 23 hours while the road was cleared and resurfaced. Details of the accident and the delays were broadcast on local and national radio as soon as they were notified by the police.

I am grateful to the emergency services in Hertfordshire and Bedfordshire for the efficient and effective way in which they responded to the incident.

The Department has encouraged the police, in liaison with the relevant highway authorities, to establish recognised diversion routes for large sections of the motorway network. The diversions in this case worked well considering the large volume of traffic carried by the M1 in Bedfordshire and Hertfordshire, but it was impossible to avoid severe delays.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, at standard prices, the amount of money given by his Department in each year since 1979 in each spending heading for which comparable statistics exist to (a) Nottingham city council and (b) Nottingham county council distinguishing, in each case, between cash and loan sanction; and if he will list those spending areas where it is not possible to make effective comparison.

Mr. Key: I have today arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish, further to his statement of 19 July, Official Report, columns 1185-1192, tables for each charging authority in England in receipt of safety net grant, classified by political control and the amount to be withdrawn in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93 expressed both in £ millions and £ per head;

(2) if he will publish, further to his statement of 19 July, Official Report, columns 1185-92, tables for each charging authority in England presently contributing to the safety net classified by political control and the amount they will gain in grants in 1991-92, expressed both in £ millions and £ per head.

Mr. Portillo: The revenue support grant transition report (England) sets out the adjustments made to revenue support grant in 1990-91 as a result of the safety net. As announced in October 1989, there will be no contributions in 1991-92 when the safety net is replaced by area protection grant financed by the Exchequer.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State proposed on 19 July that, in each area, area protection grant in 1991-92 should be no more than £25 per adult less than the combined 1990-91 benefit of the safety net and low rateable value areas grant. Tables showing the proposed level of area protection grant in 1991-92 will be available shortly when my right hon. Friend announces his proposal for the level of revenue support grant in 1991-92.

Historic Houses

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for change of use for historic houses have been made in the last five years; and how many have been approved by grading and by new category of use.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was given in grants to historic houses by English Heritage in each of the last five years; to how many houses grants were awarded; and what percentage of the total of English Heritage grant aid this represented.

Mr. Trippier: I have asked the chairman of English Heritage to write to my hon. Friend about this.

Rents-to-Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he will use to determine the success or otherwise of the rents-into-mortgages scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The pilot scheme will test whether buying on rents-to-mortgages terms offers a practical route into home ownership for tenants who cannot afford to exercise the right to buy.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he will be in a position to extend the rents-into-mortgages scheme to the whole of England and Wales;

(2) if he will consider extending the rents-into-mortgages scheme to the Gloucester area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The pilot scheme in Basildon is restricted to new town tenants and could not be extended to local authority tenants, in Gloucester or elsewhere, without legislation. The case for any extension will be examined in the light of experience in the experimental scheme.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many tenants have expressed an interest in participating in the Basildon new town rents-into-mortgages scheme;

(2) what representations he has received from (a) tenants on new town estates, (b) tenants' organisations and (c) Basildon district council in connection with the trial rents-into-mortgages scheme.

Mr. Key: Thirteen public sector tenants, including one from Basildon, have made representations welcoming the pilot rents-to-mortgages scheme following its announcement. It is too early to assess the level of interest in participating in the scheme, since the details have only recently been announced.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long the pilot rents-into-mortgages scheme in Basildon will run.

Mr. Key: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 23 October 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman), (Official Report, vol. 178, cols. 185-86).

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations from tenants or their organisation from outside the Basildon new town estates, urging the introduction of rents-into-mortgages schemes on local authority or other new town estates.

Mr. Key: We have received about 90 such representations.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department or the Basildon new town commission has any plans to undertake door-to-door canvassing to promote the rents-into-mortgages scheme.

Mr. Key: I understand that the Commission for the New Towns is writing to tenants at Basildon informing them of the rents-to-mortgages scheme, and will write again with more detailed information and invitations to apply to buy under the scheme in due course.

Approved Leaseholds

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which have applied for approved leasehold status under the tenants' choice arrangements in Greater London, indicating those which have been approved.

Mr. Key: This is a matter for the Housing Corporation rather than for this Department. I have therefore asked the Housing Corporation to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for the latest date he has figures available the existing stocks of radioactive (a) low-level waste and (b) intermediate-level waste;

(2) if he will list the latest projected stock figures he has received from Nirex for (a) low-level waste and (b) intermediate-level waste;

(3) if he will list by location in England and Wales the establishments that produce radioactive (a) high-level waste, (b) intermediate-level waste and (c) low-level waste.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The establishments producing radioactive waste, together with a description of the wastes produced, are set out in the 1988 United Kingdom Radioactive Waste Inventory, a copy of which is in the Library. The 1989 edition is due to be published in the near future.

Migratory Birds

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many species of migratory bird will be protected by the recent EC directive on the shooting of birds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many species of non-migratory bird will be protected by the recent EC directive on the shooting of birds.

Mr. Trippier: The EC birds directive, which took effect in 1979, requires member states to legislate for the protection of all birds occurring naturally within their territories but enables member states to derogate from its provision for certain purposes. In order for the United Kindom to meet its obligations under the directive the Government are proposing to remove all species from part II of schedule 2 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and to authorise further control of these species by general licences granted under section 16 of the Act. Two of the 13 species concerned migrate regularly on a significant scale.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's strategy on minimising the creation of radioactive waste.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The recent Environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance" (Cmnd. 1200) states that the Government aim to ensure that the creation of radioactive waste is minimised and that it is managed and disposed of safely. All practices giving rise to radioactive wastes must be justified. Further information on the overall strategy is set out in the 1986 White Paper on Radioactive Waste (Cmnd. 9852).

Water Metering

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what results are available from the national water metering trials; when test trials are expected to be concluded; and what research is being done to take account of the special needs of pensioners and people with low incomes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Information on the costs and problems of installing water meters has been published in the second interim report on the national water metering trials, a copy of which is in the Library. The full results of the trials will not be known until they have been completed in about 18 months' time.

Help is available through the social security system towards the cost of water bills for low-income families and the disabled, although specific amounts are not identifiable. We are considering whether a study should be carried out to see whether metered water charges are causing significant problems for particular categories of customer.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of staff currently employed by the National Rivers Authority; and what is the minimum number required to staff the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Trippier: The National Rivers Authority's estimate of total staff in post at 30 September this year is 6,800. That number will be adjusted over time in the light both of the authority's assessment of priorities and of the income it receives from levies, grant and charges.

The Government have recently approved an increase in the authority's head office staffing from its present level of some 80 to 130. This demonstrates the priority that we attach to giving the authority the resources necessary to do its job.

Iraq (British Citizens)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the housing entitlement of British citizens returning from Iraq and Kuwait who are homeless.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British nationals returning from Iraq and Kuwait to the United Kingdom, who are homeless or threatened with homelessness, have the same entitlement as other United Kingdom citizens to assistance under the homelessness provisions in part III of the Housing Act 1985.

Advice on housing options and other matters is available on a 24-hour telephone line from the Gulf families support centre, based at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Officials in my Department are ready to provide additional advice to those experiencing particular difficulties with housing.

Repair Grants (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the operation of Liverpool city council repair and renovation grants from 1987 to 1990;

(2) how much was allocated from central funds to Liverpool city council from 1987 to 1989 for housing repairs and renovation.

Mr. Key: In these years, Liverpool city council has operated an extensive programme of improvement grants to the private stock through a rolling programme in general improvement areas and housing action areas. Expenditure has averaged £10 million per annum from 1986-87 to 1989-90. From 1986-87 to 1990-91, the combined housing investment programme and estate action allocations to Liverpool city council have been:

	£ million
1986-87	27·50
1987-88	24·80
1988-89	19·85
1989-90	21·68
1990-91	37·95

African Immigrants

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the cost to Hillingdon and other similar port authorities of housing immigrant minors from Ethiopia and surrounding African countries; what plans he has to fund the additional expenditure involved by means of Government grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department of Health wrote to the local authority association on 22 October to ask for information about the costs faced by authorities, including Hillingdon, in providing child care services for unaccompanied Eritrean refugee minors. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health will consider what action, if any, he should take when he has this information.

Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 24 October, if he will now lay out the timetable for implementation of the recommendations in the Garlick report.

Mr. Portillo: The action which I announced to address the shortcomings identified in Sir John Garlick's report is being taken with all possible speed. I will keep the hon. Member informed of progress.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in the light of his recent decision to issue a section 14 notice under the Local Government Act 1988 to Hillingdon council, he will issue further guidelines for local authorities on anti-competitive behaviour within the terms of section 7(7) of the Act.

Mr. Portillo: It is the intention of my right hon. Friend to issue a circular on this subject in the near future. A draft of this guidance was circulated in April of this year.

Local Government Contracts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, with the dates of issue, (1) all local authorities which have been issued with a section 19(a) notice under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will make a statement;

(2) all local authorities which have been issued with a section 19(b) notice under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

28 March 1989: Metropolitan Borough of Wirral: Section 19A notice;

23 October 1989: Metropolitan Borough of Wirral: Section 19B direction;

20 December 1989: London Borough of Brent: Section 19A notice;

24 July 1990: London Borough of Brent: Section 19B direction;

10 October 1990: Tonbridge and Malling Borough Council: Section 19A notice.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will continue to make use of the sanction powers available to him under section 19 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 where it appears to him that a local authority had failed to comply with the relevant provisions of the Act in carrying out construction or maintenance work.

Historic Buildings

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made on computerising the statutory lists of buildings of special architectural or historic interest.

Mr. Trippier: English Heritage is reviewing 379 of the lists produced during the early years of the national listing resurvey, and these lists will be computer-based. By the end of 1992, when the exercise will have been completed, about 20 per cent. of list entries will be on a computerised database.

The Royal Commission on the Historical Monuments of England is about to commence a pilot study, scheduled to last six months, of the lists for County Durham. The primary objective of the study is to explore whether computerisation of the remaining lists to a standard of information, agreed by the Department and English Heritage, is feasible.

Business Rates

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much he expects business rate bills to rise in 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo: In 1991-92, 20 per cent. of businesses will still be gaining from the revaluation and the introduction of the UBR in cash and real terms. Around 45 per cent. of businesses will have reached their full new rate bill and will face no further real terms increases.

The remaining 35 per cent. of businesses will still be benefiting from the transitional arrangements which were introduced when the new system came into effect on 1 April 1990. Of these, only one fifth—7 per cent. of all businesses—will face the maximum transitional increase of 20 per cent. in real terms.

These figures compare very favourably with the old system where, between 1979-80 and 1989-90, locally set non-domestic rate poundages rose nationally by an average of 37·4 per cent. in real terms.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state for each urban development corporation (i) the gross expenditure on capital projects and grants, (ii) the gross expenditure on physical infrastructure and (iii) the proceeds of land and property sales in the last financial year.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Expenditure in 1989-90 was as follows:

Urban Development Corporation expenditure 1989-90 (£ million)

Urban Development Corporation	Capital projects and grants[1]	Physical infrastructure[2]	Proceeds from land and property sales
Black Country	19·6	14·1	0·5

Tyne and Wear	31·4	0·7	3·8

[1] Total expenditure on environmental projects, land purchase, land reclamation, housing and grants to industry and the voluntary sector.
[2] Total expenditure on transport and service infrastructure.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whom he consults before making a decision to list a building under the Town and Country Planning Act.

Mr. Trippier: Section 1(4) of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 states that the Secretary of State shall consult English Heritage and such other persons or bodies of persons as appear to him appropriate as having special knowledge of, or interest in, buildings of architectural or historic interest. In the vast majority of cases the Secretary of State does not look beyond English Heritage for advice, but he does take into account views expressed by other organisations and individuals should they make representations on specific cases.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing local authority expenditure in respect of magistrates courts for each year from 1980-81 to 1990-91, the allowance made for his expenditure in each of those years and the projected level of expenditure for 1991-92.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 29 October 1990]: The table shows current expenditure in respect of magistrates courts for 1980-81 to 1990-91 and the provision for this expenditure for the years 1982-83 to 1989-90. The figures for 1980-81 and 1981-82 are not available. Within the new arrangements for recording public expenditure, from 1990-91 onwards the provision for magistrates courts is not separately identifiable.

	Current expenditure (£ million)	Current expenditure provision (£ million)
1980-81	89·379	n/a
1981-82	102·175	n/a

Business Rateable Values

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the number of appeals against business rateable value revaluations lodged in each standard region up to 30 September 1990.

Mr. Key [holding answer 29 October 1990]: The number of proposals to alter a non-domestic rating list reported as received in the regions operated by the valuation office is as follows:

Region	Proposals
East Anglia	50,080
East Midland	58,452
Liverpool	35,079
London	107,936
Manchester	41,977
Northern	69,853
South Eastern	38,002
Southern	48,667
Wales	27,336
Western	37,924
West Midland	48,641
Central List	17
Total	563,964

In addition, there have been approximately 68,000 appeals against certifications made by valuation officers for the purposes of the transitional arrangements.

Archery

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any EEC documents or Council directives that may have an effect on the sport of archery.

Mr. Atkins: I am aware of COM(90) 453 on control of the acquisition and possession of weapons.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the control of archery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government seek to encourage the development of archery with appropriate regard to public safety.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to seek advice and receive representations from the Grand National Archery Society before enforcing any controls on the sport.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are always willing to consult where appropriate and to receive representations from those involved in the sport of archery.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations about Con (89) 446 Final-SYN 98 and the effect it may have on archery.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on moves towards the greater control of archery.

Mr. Atkins: None.

SCOTLAND

Grey Herons

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences have been issued to shoot grey herons at Scottish freshwater fish farms in each of the last five years; and how many herons have been shot under each licence.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The details are as follows for the period 1986-90:

Licences granted

Year	Number
1986	—
1987	1
1988	1
1989	1
1990	1

Numbers killed under each licence

Year	Number
1986	—
1987	3
1988	4
1989	3

[1] (Until October) licence limited to maximum of six.

Each licence application to shoot grey herons is assessed by the NCC in advance of any decision by the Secretary of State. It provides advice on the merits of each application and in particular comments on whether other non-lethal alternative techniques should continue to be pursued. This assessment by the NCC and the Secretary of State is rigorous and two, two, one, and one applications were turned down in 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1990 respectively.

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce a temporary scheme to help alleviate fuel costs for Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. while the Gulf crisis continues.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to do so. Caledonian MacBrayne has decided that no immediate fuel surcharge will be applied to its fares and tariffs, but is keeping the situation under review. My right hon. and learned Friend will take into account the estimated cost of fuel in determining the level of the company's deficit grant for 1991-92.

Hospitals

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each hospital closed in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Scottish Office Spending

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list Scottish Office spending by function in 1978-79 and 1989-90 in (a) real terms and (b) the percentage change as a proportion of Scottish Office spending.

Mr. Rifkind: Because of the changes to the definition of the public expenditure planning total from 1 April 1990, detailed comparison with years before 1984-85 cannot easily be made.

The table shows the figures for 1978-79 adjusted to the new planning total basis on readily available information. They must be treated as approximate figures only.

Crime Statistics, Strathclyde

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the recorded levels of crime by (a) the seven standard categories and (b) the total number of crimes in each year since 1979 in (i) division K of Strathclyde region police authority and (ii) the average for Strathclyde region police authority; and if he will give the total change in both areas 1979 to 1989 in percentage terms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the following table.

Notes:
Data for 1979 have been regrouped on the basis of the current Scottish Home and Health Department classification of crimes and offences which was last revised in 1980.
Prior to 1980, the return included crimes and offences reported to the Procurator Fiscal by agencies other than the police in which a prosecution was taken. Since 1980, these cases have been excluded. In 1982, there were about 6,400 such cases in the whole of Scotland, of a total of 762,483 crimes and offences.
Most of the increase in crimes in group 5 is in recorded cases of re-offending while on bail which may in part be explained by changes in recording practice.

Air Pollution, Renfrew

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce his decision on the application lodged in July 1990 for a certificate of registration for Cleveland Fuels Ltd. of Clyde street, Renfrew under the Control of Industrial Air Pollution Regulations for incineration of waste residues at Renfrew.

Mr. Rifkind: Technical aspects of the proposals received for Cleveland Fuels Ltd. are being considered by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate. I will announce my decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy, when considering the current application by Cleveland Fuels Ltd. for a certificate of registration in terms of the Control of Industrial Air Pollution (Registration of Works) Regulations 1989 and the statutory notice required, to give consideration to (a) the date of receipt by Renfrew district council of a copy of the application in relation to the date when the notice of application was first published in the Glasgow Herald and (b) the timing of the application to coincide with local holidays.

Mr. Rifkind: The procedure for advertising applications made under the terms of the Control of Industrial Air Pollution (Registration of Works) Regulations 1989 is laid down in the regulations. Because of the delay which occurred in making a copy of the application by Cleveland Fuels Ltd. available for inspection locally, I agreed to consider all representations that were received, including those after the statutory deadline.

St. Rollox Site

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to inform the House as to his decision regarding the St. Rollox site planning application; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to dismiss Glasgow district council's appeal against Strathclyde regional council's direction calling in for its determination the applications made by Miller Developments Ltd. and the British Rail Property Board. Letters announcing this decision were dispatched to the councils on 26 October.

Voluntary Training Centres

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many youth training centres will close as a result of the level of funding for voluntary training centres in 1990-91 in (a) Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The future of training centres is entirely the responsibility of those organisations, including voluntary organisations, who run them. The Government do not fund youth training centres; they guarantee to provide a youth training place for every eligible young person in Scotland who wishes one and pay managing agents for filled training places.

European Single Market

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has been taken by his office in order to help or advise Scottish industries and the financial sector to prepare for 1992 in terms of (a) competitiveness and (b) adequate access to continental markets of their goods and services.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1990]: In addition to the Government's "Europe Open for Business" campaign, which is delivered in Scotland by the Industry Department for Scotland, an extensive range of assistance is available under the enterprise initiative to help Scottish firms prepare for the single market. In particular, the consultancy initiatives assist companies to improve their competitiveness by developing skills in six key areas of management practice, and substantial help is available to assist firms to break into export markets or develop their existing overseas business. In addition, I chair the single market committee of the Scottish Economic Council, which has published a number of reports designed to assist the Scottish business community, including a paper on the implications of the single market for the Scottish financial services sector.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public body has the specific task of helping Scottish financial sector development such as the ones created in Dublin and Amsterdam in preparation for 1992.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The Government's policies are directed towards creating an environment in which the Scottish financial sector can prepare with confidence for the challenge of 1992. I share the financial community's own view that the development of its activities within that framework is not a matter for public sector direction but for the community itself.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Care Grant

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by social security office the percentage refusal rate to community care grant claimants for the last 12 months; and what was the refusal rate for the previous 12 months.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Income Support

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to amend present benefit regulations to enable 19-year-olds in full-time relevant education to claim income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's position is that young people remaining at school after their 19th birthday to complete their studies, and their families, should turn for any necessary additional financial assistance to the sources of funding available through educational agencies. We are aware of the problems affecting a small number of people in these circumstances.

Refuges

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what sums of money are being paid in hostel transitional protection payments by the central unit within his Department; how many hostels are in receipt of these payments; what arrangements he has agreed for dealing with these payments from 1 April 1991; and which organisations have been consulted.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 15 October. A total of 1,519 hostels are receiving payments of varying amounts from the Department's central unit. Details have been given to the other Departments involved. In addition, officials in the Department recently had discussions with the chairman of the special needs housing forum.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how his Department's central unit will ensure that those refuges entitled to receive hostel transitional protection will receive it;

(2) how the hostel transitional protection compensatory payment is to be implemented when it becomes permanent funding from April 1991.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The temporary payments made by the Department's central unit will cease from April 1991, when the money will be transferred to other Departments, as explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 15 October. Inquiries about the detailed arrangements for distributing the money to hostels would be best directed to those Departments.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on consultations with the hostels sector on transitional protection payments for hostels from April 1991.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The temporary payments made by the Department's central unit will cease from April 1991, when the money will be transferred to other Departments, as explained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 15 October. Accordingly, the question of further consultation about such payments does not arise. On the arrangements for funding from other sources, departmental officials recently met the chairman of the special needs housing forum.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what his Department's central unit is doing to expedite the payment of housing benefit to women and children in refuges and to rectify the situation in those cases where underpayments have occurred;

(2) how many complaints regarding problems with the housing payment to women in refuges have been received by his Department's central unit office in London.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A central unit was set up in the Department's headquarters in London to make payments to hostels to compensate them for any shortfall in income as a result of the changes in income support and housing benefit for people living in hostels in October 1989. There have been no complaints about the arrangements for payments by the central unit to hostels.

Although the Department oversees the scope and structure of the housing benefit scheme, it is local authorities that have full responsibility for its day-to-day administration.

Hostages (Dependants)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the benefit entitlement of people whose spouses are held in the Gulf and whose income has ceased.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Income support can be paid to those spouses resident in Great Britain who satisfy the normal conditions of entitlement, and who will in consequence be awarded maximum housing benefit and/or community charge benefit. Local authorities can award housing benefit, for help with eligible rents, and community charge benefit to help with their liability for any personal or collective community charge liability. The assessment of these benefits will not take into account any income or assets held in the Gulf that cannot be transferred to the United Kingdom.

Special payments are available to people in Great Britain who cannot get income support because their partners are working in the Gulf but are unable to send money home due to hostilities, if there is financial hardship.

Disability

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by Department of Social Security office in the Northern region, the number of disablement benefit gratuities paid under regulation 13 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions 1986.

Mr. Scott: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of the September/October 1990 guidance note for adjudication officers in Department of Social Security offices dealing with claims arising under regulation 13 of the Social Security (1·1 and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1986 for backdating of claims in respect of the prescribed industrial disease vibration white finger.

Mr. Scott: Guidance for adjudication officers is a matter for the chief adjudication officer, although I understand that no such central guidance was issued in September-October 1990.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of claimants is (a) male and (b) female for the latest available year, broken down, if possible, by benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The following tables set out such information as is available, for the most recent available date.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Statistics

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of the reductions in the expected values of the balancing items in the personal sector, industrial and commercial companies, financial sector, general Government sector and overseas sector in the national accounts as a result of the improvements in Government statistics made since 15 February 1989; when he expects the reductions to be achieved; and what further improvements he is seeking.

Mr. Maples: It is too soon to judge the long-term effects on sectorial balancing items of the changes in Government statistics proposed in February 1989 and subsequently. However, the initial estimates of sectorial balancing items for 1988 (published in "Financial Statistics" April 1989) have subsequently been reduced, particularly for the overseas sector (by £7·1 billion), the industrial and commercial companies' sector (by £11·4 billion) and the personal sector (by £16·0 billion): see "Financial Statistics" for September 1990, a copy of which is in the Library. Reductions have also been made to the balancing items in earlier years, particularly for the overseas sector. Further reductions are anticipated as the effects of the programme of changes are implemented during the next year or so.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration has been given since 15 February 1989 by the Central Statistical Office to the development of the family expenditure survey as a comprehensive data source on all items of household income, expenditure and financial transactions.

Mr. Maples: Households are sensitive to questions regarding their incomes and financial transactions and it is therefore difficult to obtain such data from the family expenditure survey (FES). Priority is therefore being given to pursuing alternative sources of this information. Development of the family expenditure survey will be considered if no satisfactory alternatives are found.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what work has been undertaken since 15 February 1989 by the Central Statistical Office and the Inland Revenue on developing an independent basis for estimating the evasion adjustment for the hidden economy in the income estimate for gross domestic product;

(2) whether the first annual review by the Central Statistical Office of the balance of statistical reporting among industries has been completed; and what action has ensued;

(3) what steps have been taken to incorporate quality changes more adequately into output price indices since 15 February 1989;

(4) whether data on value added tax receipts are now used in constructing the output measure of the gross domestic product;

(5) what steps have been undertaken since 15 February 1989 to contract out the collection and processing of data by the Central Statistical Office;

(6) what investigation has been made by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since 15 February 1989 into possible under-recording of exports entered prior to shipment; and what actions have been taken as a result;

(7) what feasibility study has been made of the use of company accounting systems to provide information on income, expenditure and financial transactions;

(8) whether the Inland Revenue is using tax records to produce better estimates of monetary sector profits excluding net interest receipts;

(9) what new sources have been used since 15 February 1989 on personal sector financial transactions;

(10) what firm agreements have been made with other Departments by the Central Statistical Office on the definition and quality of their contributions to the national accounts since 15 February 1989.

Mr. Maples: I refer the hon. Member to the implementation report on the Pickford scrutiny of Government economic statistics, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of the reduction in the expected error in the gross domestic product, as measured by the gap between the income and expenditure measures, as a percentage of the gross domestic product, to be expected from the improvements in Government statistics made since 15 February 1989; when he expects the reduction to be achieved; and what further improvements he is seeking.

Mr. Maples: The gap between the income and expenditure measures of gross domestic product has been reduced by the introduction of (1) national accounts statistical adjustments, which have been made to the expenditure measure GDP(E) in the latest years to bring it more into line with the output GDP(O) and income GDP(I) measures; and (2) alignment adjustments, which are applied to the quarterly estimates of both GDP(E) and GDP(I) so that their short-term growth better reflects that of the preferred GDP(O) measure for indicating short-term movements.

These adjustments are described more fully in the quarterly national accounts articles in "Economic Trends" and in the national accounts Blue Book.

An announcement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 17 May 1990 of a series of further measures to improve the quality of economic statistics included several aimed at increasing the reliability of the income and expenditure measures. These are collecting more information on companies' investment, stockbuilding and profits, using statutory inquiries where possible; collecting more information on external trade in services; and carrying out a survey into the procedures followed for the valuation of external trade in goods.

The main aim of these measures is to provide timely estimates of better quality. This should lead to a reduction in the national accounts statistical adjustments necessary to produce a coherent set of national accounts.

A comprehensive statement on the current state of official economic statistics, including plans for the future on how further improvements to the statistics can be achieved, was submitted in evidence to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee on Wednesday 24 October 1990, and a copy of this memorandum lodged in the House of Commons Library.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to "Official Statistics: Counting with Confidence", the report of a working party of the Royal Statistical Society under the chairmanship of Professor Peter G. Moore, president of the society, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The working party's report has been considered. The Government welcome its conclusions that there is no evidence of any failure of integrity by members of the Government statistical service. But the Government do not intend to change further the way in which successive Governments have organised official statistical services by centralising all statistical services. I have asked the director of the Central Statistical Office to consider with other Government Departments, and in consultation with the RSS working party, how the other concerns expressed in its report might be met.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what priority he accords to public confidence in the integrity of official statistics; and what steps he is taking to increase it.

Mr. Maples: The Government accord high priority to maintaining public confidence in the integrity of official statistics. Where necessary, steps are taken to improve the quality of official statistics, as in the package of improvements announced by the Chancellor on 17 May in respect of economic statistics.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what safeguards exist to protect the integrity of official statistics against political interference by Ministers; and what steps he proposes to take to strengthen those safeguards.

Mr. Maples: Members of the Government statistical service follow the practices set out in the guidance note on "Integrity in the Government Statistical Service" issued by the then head of the GSS, Sir John Boreham and published in pages 68.19 and 68.20 of "Statistical News" in February 1985, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what public mechanism is available to the head of the Government statistical service in response to a ministerial decision which, in his view, might compromise the integrity of the service.

Mr. Maples: Members of the Government statistical service follow the practices set out in the guidance note on "Integrity in the Government Statistical Service" issued by the then head of the GSS, Sir John Boreham and published in pages 68.19 and 68.20 of "Statistical News" in February 1985, a copy of which is available in the Library.

The head of the Government statistical service, like other civil servants, would have available the remedies set out in the memorandum entitled "The Duties and Responsibilities of Civil Servants", reported by the Prime Minister to the House on 2 December 1987, at columns 572-75. He also has right of direct access to the Prime Minister if he feels there is any problem on the integrity of statistics.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what account the Government take of needs other than their own in determining the work of the Government statistical service;

(2) what specific consideration is given to the information needs of Parliament, business, academia, the media and the general public in determining the work of the Government statistical service.

Mr. Maples: Government Departments do, where necessary, consult relevant bodies about the collection and use of statistics. In addition some statistical information is collected for the European Community under the terms of certain Community measures.

The large body of data collected is, where practicable, made available outside Government on terms which cover the costs of dissemination.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to review the present arrangements in the Government statistical service for the co-ordination of methodology, definitions, scope, timing of publications, and computer hardware and software, between Departments; and what sanctions are available to the Central Statistical Office to secure the development of a coherent statistical system.

Mr. Maples: I am satisfied that existing arrangements are adequate for ensuring that issues of common concern are resolved satisfactorily between Departments.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in what form United Kingdom official statisticians will make primary returns available to the Statistical Office of the European Communities for further analysis, with appropriate safeguards for confidentiality of individual returns, after 1992;

(2) whether primary statistical returns which will be made available to the statistical office of the European Communities after 1992 will be available in the same form to other United Kingdom Government Departments and to users outside Government for further analysis.

Mr. Maples: Council regulation 1588/90 of 11 June 1990 on the transmission of data subject to statistical confidentiality to the Statistical Office of the European Communities (Eurostat) came into force on 18 June 1990. The regulation is an enabling measure only. Further regulations will be necessary to specify any information which might be transmitted to Eurostat. It is, however, expected that it would rarely be necessary to transmit primary returns to Eurostat. There are no plans for changing the procedures within the United Kingdom.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he allows the Central Statistical Office to respond when public comment on published statistics is so selective as to distort the overall conclusions from the statistics.

Mr. Maples: When public commentary on its statistics involves statements that are factually incorrect, the CSO can and does draw attention to this publicly.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what statistical surveys have been made statutory since 15 February 1989 to improve the quality of data at less cost to business.

Mr. Maples: Since that date the following inquiries to business have been converted from voluntary to statutory status:

Monthly sales inquiries for the non-engineering sectors.
Supplementary quarterly sales inquiries for Wales and Scotland.
Quarterly inquiry into stockbuilding in the production industries.
Quarterly inquiry into direct investment.
Quarterly inquiry into iron castings (in addition the frequency of this inquiry has been reduced to annual).

Plans for the conversion to statutory status are well advanced for the following additional inquiries:

Quarterly inquiry into wholesalers stockbuilding.
Quarterly inquiry into capital expenditure.

Responsibility for those inquiries was transferred to the Central Statistical Office from the Department of Trade and Industry on 31 July 1989. The conversion to statutory status for those inquiries, excepting the sales inquiries, is being made as part of the package of further improvements announced by the Chancellor on 17 May 1990 and is accompanied by increases in sample size to meet the required standards of reliability. However, the use of statutory inquiries enables results to those standards to be obtained at less cost and with a fairer distribution of response burdens among businesses than would otherwise have been necessary.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make the tables in the Government expenditure plans available in spreadsheet form on floppy discs, complete with the commands, functions and macros which specify the relations between the tables, and between the tables and the national accounts available on floppy discs from the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Maples: We do not, at present, have any plans to make tables on public expenditure data available on floppy disc.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the scope for improvements in the quality of Government statistics in the absence of the centralisation in a central statistical service of data definition, collection, processing, primary analysis and publication as recommended by the July 1990 report "Official Statistics: Counting with Confidence," of a working party of the Royal Statistical Society under the chairmanship of Professor Peter G. Moore; and what scope he had identified for improvements in statistics and policy units in major Departments and in the reconciliation and mutual checking of information from statistical returns, administrative sources, tax data and company accounts.

Mr. Maples: The Government statistical service seeks continuously to make improvements in the quality of Government statistics where these represent value for money. The centralisation of data definitions, collection processing, primary analysis and publication is not a necessary condition for achieving all these improvements. Where such centralised co-ordination can contribute to making improvements it is carried out by the Central Statistical Office through a system of interdepartmental committees. The reconciliation and checking of information from statistical returns, administrative sources, tax data and company accounts is subject to constraints on the availability of such data, but where necessary and feasible such work is carried out. The organisation of statistical work in other Departments is a matter for the relevant Minister.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what study he is making of the opportunity offered by the requirement to make primary returns available to the statistical office of the European Communities to improve the coherence and accuracy of United Kingdom statistics and the use made of modern information technology.

Mr. Maples: None. It is not expected that many primary returns will be made to the Statistical Office of the European Communities.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements exist for the systematic evaluation of Government statistics and for research upon statistical methodology by which they can be improved.

Mr. Maples: The evaluation of statistics is a normal part of the function of those responsible for their production and methodological research is also carried out in the relevant parts of the Government statistical service. Since the reorganisation of the Central Statistical Office, a unit concerned with the overall quality of the national accounts has carried out evaluation work in selected areas. In addition, two statistical techniques units in the Central Statistical Office, one in London and one in Newport, are responsible for the application of existing statistical methodology to improve the quality of statistics; these units also undertake research to develop new techniques or extend the scope of existing ones.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision has been made in 1990-91 for expenditure specifically on the evaluation of statistics and research into statistical methodology by the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Maples: Seven posts are devoted full time to the evaluation of statistics and research into statistical methodology. In addition, the statisticians concerned with the regular production of statistics will be involved in the evaluation of their output. About £65,000 of the budget for external research has been earmarked for work in evaluation and research in methodology.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many visiting and exchange appointments were made by the Central Statistical Office in 1989-90 to other statistical organisations outside Government and abroad, respectively.

Mr. Maples: In 1989-90 the Central Statistical Office seconded two members of staff to the Statistical Office of the European Communities. In addition there are regular working contacts with statistical organisations outside Government in the United Kingdom and with other national and international statistical organisations.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what control the Central Statistical Office has over the timing of the publication of Government statistics.

Mr. Maples: The Central Statistical Office publishes its statistics as soon as possible after they are compiled. Information about the date and time of release of its major statistical outputs is generally announced one month in advance by means of a regular press notice. Exceptionally, notification of the release of the monthly overseas trade statistics is provided six months in advance and for the retail prices and tax and price indices, notification is given annually in advance.

The CSO has no responsibility for the publication of statistics produced by other Departments. The release dates of some of the major series are covered by the special press notice referred to. I understand that, as a general rule, departmental practice is to publish statistics as soon as possible after their compilation.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the practices controlling guidance given to outsiders by Ministers and officials based on estimates and access to final figures of statistics before their publication.

Mr. Maples: Most economic statistics are published to prearranged timetables, with minimum delay once they are finalised. Circulation to Ministers and officials before publication is strictly limited on a "need to know" basis. Ministers are fully aware of their responsibility to observe strict propriety in their use of any information obtained in their ministerial capacity. Officials are similarly aware of their responsibility and are subject to departmental discipline in the event of any inappropriate use of information obtained in their official capacity.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what embargos and controls by the Government statistical service exist on access to figures before Government statistical results are publicly available.

Mr. Maples: The Central Statistical Office restricts advance notification of the figures it compiles to those with an operational need to know them. Similar rules apply throughout Government but their precise application is obviously a matter for individual Departments.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether (a) the Government statistical service or (b) any independent outside advisory body advises Ministers about which statistics should be collected or discontinued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: The Government statistical service is decentralised and it is therefore for Ministers with departmental statistical directorates to comment on the advice about statistics which they receive.

The Chancellor receives advice on the collection of statistics from the director of the Central Statistical Office, from Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise directors of statistics and from Treasury officials. At the request of Ministers the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee has from time to time considered specific issues and made recommendations. The Census of Production Advisory Committee also advises on census of production matters from time to time. In addition the Chancellor receives representations on the collection or discontinuation of statistics from many organisations.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been made in the size of the purchases inquiry for input-output tables since 15 February 1989; and what changes in the accuracy of the tables will result.

Mr. Maples: Since 15 February 1989, two major changes have been made to the size of the purchases inquiry being conducted for the year 1989 in order to reduce the burden on business.

The number of forms sent out to industry has been reduced from the proposed 10,600 to 9,300. This has reduced expected overall coverage in terms of employment from 78 per cent. to 72 per cent.

The average number of questions asked on the forms has been reduced from 32 to 17.

The needs of the input-output tables were a major consideration in deciding how to minimise the effect of the reductions on the results. There will be a small reduction in accuracy in that part of the tables showing the industrial structure of production industries, due to the reduced coverage and number of questions asked. This reduction in accuracy will not significantly affect the use of the tables in Government, both as an aid in industry economic analysis and as a framework within which to evaluate estimates for components of the national accounts.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which of the recommendations of the Pickford review of Government economic statistics which the Government accepted in whole or in part were not implemented by the dates given in the note by the Central Statistical Office of 15 February 1989.

Mr. Maples: There were delays in implementation of recommendations 3, 14, 24, 27 and 30 beyond the target dates given in the action plan dated 15 February 1989. Implementation of recommendations 7 and 8 in July 1989, involving the introduction of new monthly sales inquiries to manufacturing industry, was in advance of the target date of January 1990. The reasons for any delay, which include the modification or extension of the original recommendations, are given in the implementation report on the Pickford scrutiny of Government economic statistics, which has been placed in the Library.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many statisticians are employed in the statistical techniques units in the Central Statistical Office and the Business Statistics Office in monitoring technical aspects of existing surveys and in planning new ones.

Mr. Maples: Two professional statisticians.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what Central Statistical Office data are issued on floppy disc with the printed publications, along the lines of the 1990 annual review of Government-funded research and development.

Mr. Maples: The latest edition of input-output tables for the United Kingdom included a floppy disc with the printed publication. In addition, the Central Statistical Office's databank service offers a range of regularly updated macro-economic and related statistical data on floppy disc. This includes the contents of "Economic Trends", "Monthly Digest of Statistics", "Financial Statistics", and the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" as well as the annual Pink Book and Blue Book publications and a number of other datasets prepared for release alongside the main macro-economic press notices.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Business Statistics Office proposes to integrate its registers with those of the Department of Employment.

Mr. Maples: Treasury and Department of Employment Ministers have agreed to a feasibility study of a proposal to integrate the Central Statistical Office and Department of Employment's registers of businesses. The study is due to report during 1991 on the costs and benefits of implementing the proposal.

Small Businesses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to simplify corporation tax return and PAYE payment procedures for small businesses.

Mr. Maude: The Government are introducing new arrangements for making returns and payments of corporation tax. These new procedures, which are known as pay and file, will come into effect in 1993 on present plans. They are designed to simplify and streamline the corporation tax system for all companies, including small incorporated businesses.

There has been a recent efficiency scrutiny on PAYE payment dates and the scrutineer made a number of detailed recommendations for improvements to administrative procedures and working arrangements which are being considered.

Loan Interest (Tax Relief)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of tax relief on interest payments on bridging loans for the purchase of residential property in (a) 1989 and (b) the first half of 1990; and how many taxpayers benefited in each period.

Mr. Maude: I regret that information is not available centrally to answer this question.

Budget Council

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the European Community's Budget Council in July.

Mr. Maude: The Budget Council met in Brussels on 27 July. The Paymaster General represented the United Kingdom. The Council established a first reading draft budget for 1991 totalling 54·7 becu (£38·1 billion) in commitment appropriations and 52·4 becu (£36·5 billion) in payment appropriations, respectively 830 mecu (£578 million) and 586 mecu (£408 million) below the figures proposed by the Commission in the preliminary draft budget (PDB).

The 1991 budget is the third to be subject to the arrangements for budgetary discipline arising from the 1988 European Council and the inter-institutional agreement between the Council, the Commission and the European Parliament which incorporates expenditure ceilings for 1988-92. The table shows that the first reading draft budget is some way within those ceilings:

	Financial perspective		Draft budget
	mecu	[2]£ million	mecu	[2]£ million
Commitment appropriations
1. FEOGA guarantee	33,000	22,997	30,104	20,976
2. Structural funds	14,054	9,794	13,897	9,684
3. R and D and integrated Mediterranean programmes	2,516	1,753	2,129	1,484
4. Other policies	4,255	2,965	3,853	2,685
5. Reimbursements and administration	4,559	3,177	3,699	2,578
6. Monetary reserve	1,000	697	1,000	697
Total	59,384	41,383	54,682	38,106
Total payment[1] appropriations	56,950	39,686	52,423	36,532

[1] There is only a global ceiling for payments.
[2] The ERM central rate of £1 = 1·435 ecu is used throughout this reply.

Provision for agricultural guarantee expenditure is about 2,896 mecu (£2,018 million) below the financial perspective. The draft budget also includes provisions of 810 mecu (£564 million) for the cost of depreciating existing agricultural stocks, and of 1,000 mecu (£697 million) for a monetary reserve which can be drawn up only to cover part of any additional agricultural expenditure arising from a change in the $-ecu exchange rate.

Non-obligatory expenditure (DNO) in the draft budget totals 20·9 becu (£14·6 billion) in commitments and 18·6 becu (£13·0 billion) in payments. In accordance with the conclusions of the 1988 February European Council, the Budget Council distinguished without these totals between so-called "privileged" and "non-privileged" expenditure. The draft budget established by the Budget Council marginally reduced privileged expenditure. As regards non-privileged DNO, the Council agreed that the maximum rate doctrine would not be applied this year. However, the draft budget in effect reduced non-privileged expenditure as against the PDB by more than in previous years; and the Council endorsed a robust declaration making clear that non-application of the maximum rate in relation to this year's budget was an inevitable consequence of developments in eastern Europe, and implied no weakening of budgetary discipline.

The budgetary implications of German unification were not reflected in the PDB and the Budget Council did not attempt to make provision for this in its draft budget. The Commission has now put forward a proposal to revise the financial perspective as a result of German unification. An amending letter to the PDB or a supplementary budget will be required to take account of the consequences of agreement on this proposal for the 1991 budget.

The European Parliament considered the draft budget at its October plenary. The Parliament's amendments and modifications will be considered by the Budget Council on 15 November.

Luncheon Vouchers

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount the yield from the taxation of luncheon vouchers, over the minimum allowed tax free, exceeds the cost of collection; what is the amount of yield and the costs of collection in the last full year for which figures are available; and if he has any plans for ending this form of taxation.

Mr. Major [holding answer 25 October 1990]: The estimated yield from the taxation of meal vouchers is about £5 million at an estimated Revenue staff cost of £60,000. There are no plans to end this form of taxation.

Oil Production

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total tax on North sea oil production, including royalties, paid by oil companies, monthly, from August 1989 to September 1990.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 26 October 1990]: The information is as follows:

	Tax £ million
August 1989	318
September 1989	205
October 1989	357
November 1989	68
December 1989	252
January 1990	193
February 1990	85
March 1990	679
April 1990	89
May 1990	87
June 1990	−15
July 1990	88
August 1990	106
September 1990	489

The figures include royalties, petroleum revenue tax and North sea corporation tax before ACT set-off.

Tax Havens

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to end the tax havens provided by offshore islands and other places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 29 October 1990]: No; the United Kingdom has no power to dictate the tax regimes of other jurisdictions.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to change the method of calculating the retail prices index so that the figure given is more closely in line with those of other members of the EEC.

Mr. Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to standardise the method of calculating the retail prices index to conform with other European countries; and if this has been proposed to other member states of the European Economic Community or European Free Trade Association.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 26 October 1990]: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to change the method of calculating the retail prices index in the interest of international comparability.

A variety of methods is used by other European countries in constructing their consumer price indices, and although a recent consultant's report has identified possible scope for harmonisation, each country has kept its own index.

DEFENCE

Regiment Names

6. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will complete his review of the regiments of the line together with any changes in name or area affiliation; and if he will ensure that the Devonshire and Dorset Regiment is retained as one of them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work on the future force structure of the British Army is continuing. No decisions have yet been taken and I am not yet in a position to comment on the future of individual units.

Defence Equipment Sales

14. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has or will set up a register of all sales of arms and defence equipment by private firms to foreign Governments.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

The Gulf

15. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the pay and conditions of United Kingdom service men and women in the Gulf.

22. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the pay and conditions of United Kingdom service men and women in the Gulf.

71. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the pay and conditions of United Kingdom service men and women in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has already announced measures which will ensure that no service men or women will suffer a net reduction in pay and allowances as a result of service in the Gulf. Many of our service personnel in the Gulf are living in difficult conditions, but I am satisfied that the services are doing their very best to ensure that the general welfare and morale of our troops is maintained.

26. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had concerning the reaction of NATO countries to the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has had a number of discussions with NATO colleagues about the response of NATO countries to the Gulf crisis.

28. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his counterparts within the EC to discuss the Gulf crisis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no forum within the EC in which Defence Ministers meet. However, my right hon. Friend has met a number of his western European counterparts in the recent past and the situation in the Gulf has been among the subjects discussed.

32. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are now stationed in the Persian Gulf as part of the multinational defence presence in the region.

86. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current level of United Kingdom forces engaged in operations in the Gulf area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom has committed a total of some 16,000 service personnel to the multinational effort in the Gulf, of whom some 12,000 are already in the region.

35. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what insurance cover has been arranged for British service men and women in the Gulf in the event of accidents.

80. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what insurance cover has been arranged for British service men and women in the Gulf in the event of accidents.

82. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what insurance cover has been arranged for British service men and women in the Gulf in the event of accidents.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All service personnel are eligible for benefits under the armed forces pension scheme in the event of attributable injury. Decisions to take out personal accident or life insurance cover are the responsibility of individual service men and women. A number of policies tailored to their needs is available and these are given publicity in the services. Where additional premiums are charged because of defined service risks a large part of the extra cost may be reclaimed from the Ministry of Defence.

39. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimated cost of British forces in the Gulf to the end of the financial year.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes).

54. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further assessment he has made of the implications for the defence budget of current events in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The full operating costs of the deployment in the Gulf area arising out of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, if this were to continue to the end of the financial year, without hostilities, would be expected to exceed £600 million.

A class I winter supplementary estimate to be presented shortly will seek an increase in provision partly to take account of expenditure in the Gulf.

67. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated daily expenditure on British forces in the Gulf.

81. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated daily expenditure on British forces in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 17 October 1990 at column 855.

78. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution is being made towards the costs incurred by western forces currently in the Gulf by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Both countries are contributing financially to the multinational effort in response to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. In addition, the Saudi Government are providing various forms of support for forces deployed in Saudi Arabia.

Defence Export Sales Organisation

16. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future role of the Defence Exports Sales Organisation in relation to his Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Defence Export Services Organisation will continue its very successful work of assisting United Kingdom companies, both large and small, to market and sell their defence products and services overseas.

US Forces

17. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in the United Kingdom.

29. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in the United Kingdom.

36. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in the United Kingdom.

53. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is in close contact with the United States authorities over the future level of United States forces in the United Kingdom. At present six main operating bases and 61 other facilities have been made available to the United States forces in the United Kingdom. However, arrangements are currently in hand for RAF Kemble to be returned to MOD control in 1992 and RAF Sculthorpe and the Martlesham Heath communications site in 1995. Further changes in the level of United States forces in the United Kingdom have yet to be decided.

27. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in Europe.

33. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in Europe.

69. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the future level of United States forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: President Bush has reaffirmed that the United States remains committed to maintaining a significant military presence in Europe for as long as European allies wish it to do so. However, the United States Government are reviewing their force levels in Europe in the light of changing circumstances. Following consultation with allies, Secretary of Defence Cheney has announced a rationalisation of United States bases overseas and a reduction of 40,000 United States military personnel in Europe over the next 12 months. Further proposals for reducing United States force levels in Europe are under consideration, consistent with President Bush's proposal for a 25 per cent. overall reduction in United States active forces by 1995. The United States Government have made it clear that any further reductions will be preceded by consultations with allies.

Contractorisation, Aldermaston

18. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for contractorisation at Aldermaston; and with what implications for safety and security.

49. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for contractorisation at Aldermaston; and with what implications for safety and security.

60. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been made for contractorisation at Aldermaston; and with what implications for safety and security.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: An interim management contract has been awarded to Hunting-BRAE Ltd. The contract began on 1 October. Our intention is to proceed towards full contractorisation; safety and security will continue to be of the highest priority.

56. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the introduction of contractorised management at atomic weapons establishment Aldermaston.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced in this House on 5 December 1989 that full contractor operation would be introduced at the atomic weapons establishment. As an interim step, before the introduction of the necessary legislation, a management contract has been awarded to Hunting-BRAE Ltd., a consortium led by Hunting Engineering Ltd. and including Brown and Root (UK) and AEA Technology, formerly the UK Atomic Energy Authority. The contract began on 1 October. Safety and security will continue to be of the highest priority.

Contract and Job Losses

19. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about contract and job losses associated with his Department's future programme; and what action he has taken upon these representations.

20. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about contract and job losses associated with his Department's future programme; and what action he has taken upon these representations.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of representations has been received. These and any more formal discussions will be taken into account as further work on the future defence equipment programme continues.

74. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about contract and job losses associated with his Department's future programme; and what action he has taken upon these representations.

Mr. Alan Clark: A number of representations has been received. These and any more formal discussions will be taken into account as further work on the future defence equipment programme continues.

Strategic Arms Reductions

2. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, when he last met the Secretary General of NATO, he discussed with him the question of strategic arms reduction.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A wide range of topics was discussed at my right hon. Friend's last meeting with Dr. Woerner in May at the NATO defence planning committee.

55. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for his Department's forward planning of the forthcoming completion of the strategic arms reduction talks.

68. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for his Department's forward planning of the forthcoming completion of the START talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant).

Trident

23. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what date he now expects the Trident production programme to be completed; and what was his Department's original date for expecting completion.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what date he now expects the Trident production programme to be completed; and what was his Department's original date for expecting completion.

Mr. Alan Clark: Trident remains on programme to enter service as planned in the mid-1990s. There has been no slippage in the in-service date since the decision to proceed with Trident II was announced in March 1982.

Conventional Forces

24. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials in his Department are engaged on work relating to the CFE talks.

37. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials in his Department are engaged on work relating to the CFE talks.

42. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials in his Department are engaged on work relating to the CFE talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to my answer of 26 July to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill), Official Report, columns 538-39, which gives details of the establishment of the Ministry of Defence's central policy branch for all arms control issues, the defence arms control unit. Staff from other areas are involved in the work as necessary.

83. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the defence implications for the United Kingdom of the forthcoming completion of the CFE talks.

84. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the defence implications for the United Kingdom of the forthcoming completion of the CFE talks.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock).

"Options for Change"

25. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his timetable for the implementation of his "Options for Change" proposals.

38. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration has been given to "Options for Change".

43. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his timetable for the implementation of his "Options for Change" proposals.

58. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration has been given to "Options for Change".

66. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his timetable for the implementation of his "Options for Change" proposals.

76. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his timetable for the implementation of his "Options for Change" proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated during his statement to the House in July, the "Options" study identified ways in which our armed forces might be restructured by the mid-1990s. There is a great deal of work still to be done in refining these proposals and the pace at which they will be implemented will be influenced by our consultations with NATO and allies, and by CFE.

Aircraft (Saudi Arabia)

30. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will review the number of military aircraft being deployed in Saudi Arabia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All United Kingdom force levels in the Gulf are kept under review.

31. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been removed from Greenham Common since the byelaws were declared invalid.

77. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been removed from Greenham Common since the byelaws were declared invalid.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short).

NATO

34. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he is planning to hold with his NATO colleagues regarding the alliance's area of operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Following the London declaration, a wide-ranging review of NATO strategy is in hand, and I expect to discuss the process with my colleagues in the defence planning committee meeting in December. Under article 4 of the North Atlantic treaty, alliance members consult together on threats to their territorial integrity, political independence or security, and this has been brought into play recently in respect of the Gulf situation.

Nuclear Radiation

40. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reassessment he has made of the effect of nuclear radiation upon service men and women, ex-service men and women, and others employed by or fulfilling a contract with his Department.

72. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reassessment he has made of the effect of nuclear radiation upon service men and women, ex-service men and women, and others employed by or fulfilling a contract with his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The MoD, along with the rest of the United Kingdom nuclear industry, relies on the estimates of radiation risk derived by the International Commission for Radiological Protection. This body is in process of completing a re-evaluation of levels of risk.

Beryllium Oxide Gas

41. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to safety and security arrangements in plants in the United Kingdom which produce beryllium oxide gas in connection with his Department's weapons production programme.

79. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to safety and security arrangements in plants in the United Kingdom which produce beryllium oxide gas in connection with his Department's weapons production programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. Beryllium oxide is an extremely stable material which is used commercially as a protective coating for metals exposed to very high temperatures. It is not used, however, in the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons programme.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

44. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with NATO colleagues about the fourth five-yearly review conference on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty held in Geneva from 20 August to 15 September.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not met his Israeli counterpart.

Low Flying

48. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is planning to take measures to reduce noise pollution from low-flying aircraft.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Ministry of Defence is well aware of the disturbance caused by low-flying aircraft and the regulations governing the United Kingdom low-flying system are already designed to minimise the impact of noise by spreading low flying as widely as possible and by strict controls on the heights and speeds used. A series of studies related to aircraft noise is also currently in train as set out by my predecessor in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) earlier this year, Official Report, column 517-18.

65. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the consequences for the volume of low-level flying in the United Kingdom of the recent decisions by Belgium and West Germany to ban low-level training.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom regrets the new restrictions placed on low flying in Germany and on low flying by non-Belgian aircraft in Belgium, but each country must make its own judgment of training needs based on its own particular circumstances. These restrictions will not lead to any increase in the total volume of low flying in the United Kingdom.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Llanishen

50. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with (a) South Glamorgan county council public protection committee, (b) South Glamorgan health authority and (c) South Wales police regarding emergency planning and public health and safety at the atomic weapons establishment, Llanishen, Cardiff since the fire and explosion at Ust-Kamensgorsk, Kazakhstan, USSR.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. The recent reported incident in Kazakhstan is understood to have involved production processes in which beryllium metal is obtained from ores. Such processes are not carried out at AWE (Cardiff).

Devonport Dockyards

51. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the existing arrangements governing the allocation of the core programme and commercial tendering work for Devonport dockyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The arrangements governing the commercial management of Devonport royal dockyard are kept under review both in regard to work which is allocated, known as the core programme, and that which is offered to the ship building and repair industry at large on a competitive basis for which DML is free to quote. The Government's declared aim when establishing the two contractorised dockyards was to place, by the end of the first term contract, a significant proportion of the annual workload with the unallocated programme. Subsequently the Government have had to take into account the much faster than anticipated reduction in the Royal Navy repair and refit programme and the need to make economic use of the resources available in the two dockyards. This year there have been significant changes in the planned programme at Devonport, both as a result of the announcement by my hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell, the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, on 31 July and the need to support operations in the Gulf. In consequence, it is intended, subject to the agreement of satisfactory terms, to place an early contract with DML for the refit of RFA Fort Austin, which was not previously in the Devonport core programme. In addition a substantial package of work on RFA Argus in support of Gulf operations should make a worth while contribution towards maintaining the company's workload.

United Kingdom Forces (Europe)

52. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation to discuss the role of United Kingdom forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met Dr. Woerner at the ministerial meeting of the defence planning committee in May. A range of defence issues was discussed.

Dartmoor National Park

57. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he is making with regard to the renewal of licences from the Duchy of Cornwall for live firing in the Dartmoor national park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are in regular contact with officers of the Duchy of Cornwall over the administration of the licence which governs our use of Duchy-owned land on Dartmoor for military training. The current licence does not expire until 29 September 1991, and discussions over its renewal have therefore only just begun.

Iraq

59. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's personnel held in Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 26 October at column 339.

VSEL, Birkenhead

61. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for placing further orders for ships at VSEL Ltd. (Cammell Laird) Birkenhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is the Government's policy that orders for warships should be placed following competition. VSEL is invited to tender for all such contracts that it is capable of undertaking. Where vessels are built is for the company to decide.

Princess of Wales RAF Hospital

62. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the National Health Service and health authorities regarding the future of the Princess of Wales RAF hospital in Ely.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence and Department of Health have had discussions on the future of service hospitals including the Princess of Wales RAF hospital, Ely. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

NATO Forces (Central Front)

64. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the reformulation of NATO force dispositions on the central front of the European theatre, following political developments in the Soviet Union, eastern Europe and Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the declaration issued at the London NATO summit in July made clear, the alliance's integrated force structure and strategy will change as Soviet troops are withdrawn to their home country and as a CFE treaty is implemented. We expect that there will be moves towards a reduced forward presence of forces, with increasing emphasis on mobility, flexibility and multinationality.

Hunting

70. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what permission his Department grants for hunting of animals on his Department's land.

75. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what permission his Department grants for hunting of animals on his Department's land.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In accordance with our policy to permit maximum access to Ministry of Defence land for recreational purposes wherever operational and safety considerations permit, 17 hunts have licences allowing them access to hunt over certain areas of the Ministry of Defence estates.

Horseshoe Barracks

73. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions he has made about the future use of the Horseshoe barracks in Shoeburyness.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decision has yet been made. However, it remains our objective to release Horseshoe barracks, Shoeburyness, for disposal on the open market; and to that end discussions are continuing with the local planning authority and others to identify a financially viable redevelopment solution.

Mine-clearing Forces, Germany

85. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether United Kingdom forces are to be used for mine-clearing along the former inner German border.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to use United Kingdom forces for mine-clearing along the former inner German border.

British Aerospace

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his United States counterpart; and what matters were discussed which could have a bearing on the future prospects for British Aerospace.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend last met Secretary Cheney on 15 October. A range of current defence issues was discussed.

Explosive Propellants Agreement

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial benefits accrue to the Exchequer from the explosive propellants and related products agreement concluded with Royal Ordnance in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: Over the five-year period of the agreement, the price in real terms of ammunition will reduce, depending on the particular nature, by up to 35 per cent.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he undertook, prior to the conclusion of the explosive propellants and related products agreement with Royal Ordnance in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: We were in consultation with the company and with others for 15 months prior to signature of the agreement.

United States F111 Aircraft

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish whatever data he has available as to the number of flight sorties carried out by United States F111 aircraft in the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No, we do not hold information about the total annual number of flight sorties in the United Kingdom by United States air force F111 aircraft.

RAF Tornados

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of flight sorties carried out by RAF Tornado aircraft in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of flight sorties carried out by RAF Tornado aircraft, including RAF aircraft at the tri-national Tornado training establishment, in each year since 1979 is as follows:

	Sorties
1980	94
1981	2,095
1982	6,716
1983	11,818
1984	18,739
1985	25,331
1986	33,939
1987	35,235
1988	43,411
1989	47,644

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours were flown by RAF Tornados in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of hours flown by RAF Tornado aircraft, including RAF aircraft at the tri-national training establishment, in each year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Hours
1980	135
1981	2,623
1982	8,377
1983	16,481
1984	27,104
1985	36,095
1986	47,548
1987	49,481
1988	62,498
1989	68,592

Appropriation Accounts

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the claim for stores supplied to a contractor referred to on page 18 of the Appropriation Accounts 1989-90 Volume 1: Class 1 that resulted in a loss of £135,000; and why this claim was abandoned.

Mr. Alan Clark: In August 1988, a contractor made a direct approach to MOD engineering staff to purchase from MOD at a price of £20,000 equipment for onward sale to an overseas customer. Without authorisation of the price or terms and conditions of sale, the transaction was agreed. Subsequently advice was that a claim to recover the difference between the replacement value and sale price, £135,000, should not be pursued.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cause of the slippage in planned land and property sales referred to in note (e) of page 17 of the Appropriation Accounts 1989-90 volume 1, class 1.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As explained in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990, page 50, the property market in 1989-90 was depressed and this had an adverse effect on sales of houses and land for development.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cause of the slippage of the project management fee referred to in note (a) on page 16 of the Appropriation Accounts 1989-90 volume 1, class 1.

Mr. Alan Clark: The fee was linked to the signature of contracts, the negotiation of which has taken longer than expected.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which company received the special extra-contractual payment in final settlement of a mutually terminated information technology contract amounting to £2,243,000 referred to on page 11 of the Appropriation Accounts 1989-90 volume 1, class 1; and what was the cause of this payment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The payment related to work done by Data Logic Ltd. on the design of a system for use by the Army cataloguing authority. The contract was terminated by mutual agreement in January 1990, and the payment made in respect of outstanding issues.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disciplinary action has been taken against those representatives of his Department who were in communication with members of the civil service appeal board prior to Mr. Colin Wallace's appeal in 1975.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Equipment Delivery Times

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 94, what are the financial implications of the extension of the delivery programmes for the Challenger replacement armoured repair and recovery vehicle and the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system.

Mr. Alan Clark: The detailed financial implications of the decison to extend the delivery programmes of the demountable rack off-loading and pick-up system are commercially confidential. The details of the changes to the payment schedule for the Challenger replacement armoured repair and recovery vehicle programme are also commercially confidential, but they will not, in fact, affect the delivery programme.

Equipment Procurement

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which equipment procurement programmes, whose total value is expected to be greater than £10 million, have been either delayed, cancelled, or reduced in size since 1 June.

Mr. Alan Clark: In addition to the programmes detailed in my answers of 17 and 23 October, Official Report, column 853 and column 94, I have, since 1 June, decided not to complete the Challenger towed unmanned submersible programme to formal Royal Navy acceptance standards in the light of the decision to dispose of HMS Challenger; to make delays to the high velocity missile, Phoenix, controlled effect anti-tank mine, and mobile surveillance targeting and acquisition radar programmes; and to cancel the Chieftain TLS replacement and follow-on to Lance programmes.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library any departmental records concerning the radioactive contamination received by civilian workers during the refit of the reactor room of HMS Renown in the early 1970s.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Radiation doses arising from personal contamination during refitting of nuclear submarines are insignificant. No records are therefore available.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 31 October 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Offences (Court Officials)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of road traffic or other offences of which people who were at the time of the offence a recorder, county court or circuit judge or member of a higher court have been found guilty in the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will also indicate whether such offenders were guilty of more than one offence and, where applicable, of how many offences.

The Attorney-General: This information is not available in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In the very few cases where a serving member of the judiciary has been convicted of a minor offence, and has remained in office, this information will be recorded on that individual's personal file. No central records are kept, however, and figures for the past 10 years could only be produced by examining the individual personal files of all serving and recently retired members of the judiciary.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

151. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail to discuss the transportation of goods by rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I met the chairman of British Rail on 15 October when we discussed a variety of railway issues. The Department expects to conclude its review of section 8 grants for freight transfer from road to rail shortly and British Rail will also shortly conclude its review of rail freight distribution operations and plans.

Cyclists

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State of Transport if he will meet the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis to discuss action to stop the abuse of road traffic regulations by pedal cyclists who disregard one-way street signs and traffic lights, and ride on pavements.

Mr. Chope: I shall write to the Commissioner, passing on my hon. Friend's concerns.

Toxic Chemicals

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the safety arrangements for the road carriage of toxic chemicals.

Mr. Chope: They are reviewed regularly by the Health and Safety Executive in consultation with the Department of Transport.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the working of the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority.

Mr. Freeman: The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority is an independent bi-national body established by the channel fixed link treaty. The authority's role, working practices and an account of major safety issues considered, were set out in its annual report for 1988-89, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House. I understand that the authority is preparing its annual report for 1989-90.

Airport Development

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that the concerns and views of corporate aircraft owners and operators are adequately represented in his working group to consider the advice proffered to him by the Civil Aviation Authority in CAP 570 on airport development;

(2) whether he will list the representatives, corporate bodies, interests and individuals who have been selected by him to participate in his working group to consider the Civil Aviation Authority's advice to him in CAP 570 on airport development;

(3) what consideration he has given to inviting the representative body for owners and operators of United Kingdom registered corporate aircraft based in Britain to participate in his working group to consider the advice submitted to him by the Civil Aviation Authority in CAP 570 on airport development.

Mr. McLoughlin: Since my right hon. Friend's announcement on 17 July we have been pursuing in more detail the membership and terms of reference of the working group which will consider the CAA's advice on runway capacity in CAP 570. We have had it in mind that the group should be properly constituted to examine all the relevant wider aspect of airport development, without becoming so large as to inhibit its effectiveness.

Many organisations, including representatives of business aviation interests, have sought a place on the working group and we are considering those requests in the light of the aim that I have described. My right hon. Friend expects to be able to make a further announcement soon.

Select Registrations

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the select registrations scheme.

Mr. Chope: The select registrations scheme started on 1 October. This allows motorists to purchase an entitlement to any registration number from the range H1-20 for almost all possible three-letter combinations. About 11,000 registrations were sold producing an income of £5·6 million in the past two weeks. Over 200,000 numbers are still available for purchase.

M1

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish the report of the Health and Safety Executive after it has completed its inquiry into the accident on the M1 in Bedfordshire on Tuesday 23 October involving heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Reports by inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive are internal and generally not written with a view to publication. In this case I shall ask to see the internal report and consider whether the production of a report appropriate for publication will be justified.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up an inquiry to establish the cause of the accident which blocked the M1 motorway on Tuesday 23 October; whether the packages containing the acid which spilt were safe for use on a vehicle using the motorway; whether he has powers to claim compensation for the damage caused; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: As with any major road traffic accident the police will investigate and consider whether to bring charges against anyone involved. Health and Safety Executive inspectors are investigating whether there was a breach of the regulations covering the transport of dangerous goods.

The Secretary of State has no express statutory powers to claim compensation for the damage to the motorway but he does have a common law right to sue a responsible party for damages in negligence.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost to public funds of the blockage on the M1 motorway on Tuesday 23 October.

Mr. Chope: I do not yet have full details of the cost of the blockage but I will write to my right hon. Friend as soon as these are available.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why no steps were taken to divert southbound traffic from the M1 on Tuesday 23 October so that it did not get trapped between the blockage and the last exit which remained open; who is responsible for co-ordinating action by the police, local authorities and his Department so that unnecessary delays and expense are avoided when a motorway is blocked; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On his question relating to the diversion of southbound traffic, I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd) on Tuesday 30 October at column 466.

The police are responsible for the operational control of traffic on the road network and for co-ordinating on site the actions of local authorities, the Department and emergency services in the event of a motorway blockage.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contractors are being used to repair the Severn bridge; and whether their contracts specify completion date, with penalties for late completion.

Mr. Chope: The contractor for the strengthening of the Severn crossing is Laing Industrial Engineering Construction. The main works were substantially completed in April 1990, within the provisions of the contract. Liquidated damages are imposed when applicable for late completion.

Resurfacing of the crossing is being carried out by Balfour Beatty Construction. The completion date for this contract is August 1991. Again liquidated damages may be imposed when applicable for late completion.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the repairs on the Severn bridge are due to be completed.

Mr. Chope: Strengthening work was substantially completed in April 1990. The resurfacing contract is due to be completed by August 1991.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the impact on the rate of accidents on the Severn bridge of the introduction of narrow lanes.

Mr. Chope: Narrowed lanes and associated safety measures such as a 40 mph speed limit were introduced in 1985. In the five years from 1985 the volume of traffic has increased by nearly 40 per cent. while the annual number of accidents has varied between 65 and 31. There is no evidence of a significant change in the rate of accidents since the introduction of narrow lanes.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the investigation into the cause of the recent fatal accident to workmen involved in painting the Severn bridge.

Mr. Chope: Investigations are continuing.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to investigate the introduction on the Severn bridge of automatic toll-charging facilities.

Mr. Chope: We are continually reviewing the scope for improved tolling facilities at the Severn bridge. When Severn River Crossing Ltd takes on the present bridge and the provision of a new bridge, it will be responsible for methods of tolling.

Motorways (Blockages)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reconsider his decision not to install appropriate traffic signals and gates at suitable intervals on the central reservation of motorways so that the gates can be opened by the police and vehicles trapped on a blocked carriageway can escape using the one running in the other direction.

Mr. Chope: No. Safety fences can already be removed in extremis as shown by the incident on the M1 on 23 October.

Vehicles (Pollution Control)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend roadside spot-checking of vehicle exhaust emissions to include cars and light vans; which emissions will be measured; what equipment will be used to measure emissions; and by whom measurements will be undertaken.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 October 1990]: We are already consulting on proposals for an emissions standard to be applied as from next year to vehicles in use. Compliance checking will be undertaken both at the time of the MOT test, and also at roadside enforcement spot-checks. The check will involve measuring with gas analysing equipment the volume of carbon monoxide in exhaust emissions. Measurement will be made either by trained MOT testers or by vehicle examiners from the vehicle inspectorate executive agency.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs Education

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West on 23 October, Official Report, column 158, if he will list the ways in which the local management of schools offers local education authorities the flexibility to take account of the resources needed in schools to support all pupils with special education needs.

Mr. Fallon: Under local management of schools, LEAs have freedom to decide the following. The numbers in parenthesis refer to paragraphs in LMS circular 7/88.

- whether to delegate provision for pupils with statements or to manage it centrally; (75)
- how large specialist central support teams should be, and what range of specialisms they should cover; (81)
- what variations to recognise between schools in the incidence of pupils with special needs but without statements; (115; and S33(3)(b) of the Act)
- by what means additional resources are to be allocated to take account of these variations; (115)
- how much to allocate to individual schools and in total; (115)
- what additional provision to make from contingency funds in-year where there are large unforeseen changes in pupil numbers or characteristics (such as special needs); (87(a)(i))
- by what means school's success in identifying and providing for their pupils will be monitored. (151-154)

Macmillan College

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from Macmillan college about the teaching of music; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The Department has received one recent representation from Macmillan city technology college about the teaching of music. It suggests that peripatetic music teachers employed by Cleveland LEA may find that they lose their work for the LEA if they also do work at Macmillan CTC. We would be very disturbed if this was the case and the Department is investigating the matter urgently. We would expect Cleveland LEA to be able to provide an assurance that no such discrimination is practised.

Librarians

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of qualified chartered librarians working (a) in primary schools, (b) in secondary schools, (c) in further education colleges and (d) in higher education colleges, polytechnics and universities.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list every sponsor of a city technology college with the amount promised and the city technology college concerned, in each case.

Mr. MacGregor: The principal sponsors of the city technology colleges announced to date are as follows:

Kingshurst
Hanson Industries—£1 million

Djanogly, Nottingham
Mr. Harry Djanogly—£1·1 million

Macmillan College, Teesside
BAT Industries—£1 million

Bradford
The Dixons Group plc—£1·1 million

Emmanuel College, Gateshead
The Reg Vardy Foundation—£1 million

Harris, Croydon
The Philip and Pauline Harris Charitable Trust —£1·25 million

Leigh, Dartford
Mr. G. N. Leigh—£1 million

Britschool, Croydon
The British Record Industry Trust—£1·1 million

Bacons, Southwark
Southwark Diocesan Board of Education —£1·5 million

Haberdashers' Aske's, New Cross
The Robert Aske Charity—£3·45 million

Corby
Mr. H. de Capell Brooke—£1·1 million

Derby
The Landau Foundation—£1·15 million

Telford
The Mercers' Company and Tarmac plc —£1 million each

Wandsworth
ADT—£1 million

Bristol
Cable and Wireless and The Wolfson Foundation —£1 million each

Total of principal sponsors' contributions—£20·75 million.

In addition, more than 100 companies/individuals have pledged an additional £11 million to the programme as a whole. This brings the total sponsorship to over £31 million. Discussions are continuing with other prospective sponsors, and I am confident that these talks will lead to further sponsorship.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether parents whose children are refused admission to a city technology college have the right of appeal to be heard by (a) an appeal body drawn up by the governors of a city technology college, (b) the Secretary of State, (c) the local commissioner and (d) any other independent body;

(2) if he will publish the admissions procedures that have been agreed for Bacon's city technology college;

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that parents whose children are refused admission to a city technology college are entitled to an appeal hearing.

Mr. Fallon: Details of the admissions policy and procedures for the Bacon's city technology college are available, free of charge, from the Bacon's project office, units 42/43, City Business Centre, Lower road, London SE16 2XB. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. It is for the principal of each CTC to take full responsibility for the careful selection of the most suitable pupils for that school, using criteria agreed with my right hon. Friend. My right hon. Friend does not require CTCs to establish appeals procedures. The admissions procedures of CTCs are not subject to scrutiny by any independent body. However, if a CTC failed to apply the criteria agreed with him, this matter would be pursued by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grants he intends to make to Bacon's city technology college in (a) 1990-91, (b) 1991-92 and (c) 1992-93.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. Friend has made provision for grants amounting to circa £7·1 million to be available to the Bacon's city technology college in this financial year. These relate to the management of the project and initial capital costs. The level of expenditure for the following financial years has not yet been agreed.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the conditions that govern the payment of grants to Bacon's city technology college.

Mr. Fallon: The conditions which apply to the payment of grants to city technology colleges are set out in individual funding agreements between sponsors and my right hon. Friend. The model for these agreements, which has evolved in discussions over the past year, contains all the material terms and conditions of grant. Copies of the model have today been placed in the Library. These replace the model agreement placed in the Library in July 1989.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science at what rates, for pupils (a) under and (b) over school leaving age, he has agreed to pay annual per capita grant to city technology colleges; and what are the total amounts of annual per capita grant and earmarked annual grant respectively that he has agreed to pay each city technology college during 1990-91.

Mr. Fallon: The rate of annual per capita grant—APG—in respect of each pupil for the academic year 1990-91 is £2,075 for pupils under school leaving age, and £2,365 weighted in respect of pupils over school leaving age. The total amounts of APG and earmarked annual grant—EAG—which have been agreed for payment to city technology colleges during this period are as follows:

	Total APG £	Total EAG £
Kingshurst	1,820,602	189,918
Nottingham	1,397,707	145,699
Teesside	1,234,019	134,238
Gateshead	862,550	179,048
Bradford	934,689	194,682
Dartford	—	321,605
Croydon	—	294,478

In the case of Dartford and Croydon, the colleges are being paid APG on the basis of indicative figures only, as agreement has not yet been reached on the uplift appropriate to reflect the higher costs of operating in the London area.

In addition to the per capita figure for APG, provision is made within this grant for administration costs and diseconomies of scale during each college's start-up period, reflecting good practice in respect of new schools within the LEA maintained sector.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the pupil-teacher ratio, for pupils (a) under and (b) over school leaving age, in each city technology college during the current academic year.

Mr. Fallon: Overall pupil-teacher ratios in city technology colleges for the academic year 1990-91 are as follows:

	Pupil teacher ratio (1990-91)
Kingshurst	14·082
Nottingham	12·706
Teesside	13·286
Gateshead	9·375
Bradford	10·588
Dartford	13·544
Croydon	14·516

The data necessary to calculate pupil teacher ratios in respect of pupils above and below school leaving age are not held centrally.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) boy and (b) girl pupils (i) under and (ii) over school leaving age are registered to attend each city technology college being funded by his Department during the academic year 1990-91; and what was the total number of pupils planned for each city technology college when it became fully operational.

Mr. Fallon: Numbers of pupils under and over school leaving age registered at each city technology college for the academic year 1990-91 are as follows. Planned total pupil numbers in each category are shown in brackets:

College and opening date	USLA pupils 1990-91	(full)	OSLA pupils 1990-91	(full)
Kingshurst (1988)	540	(900)	150	(200)
Nottingham (1989)	336	(825)	96	(165)
Teesside (1989)	372	(900)	—	(150)
Gateshead (1990)	150	(750)	—	(150)
Bradford (1990)	180	(750)	—	(230)
Dartford (1990)	811	(1,050)	110	(200)
Croydon (1990)	830	(900)	70	(200)

Pupil numbers disaggregated by sex are not held centrally.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will take steps to ensure that parent governors at Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham city technology college are elected, in line with parent governors at maintained schools, and subject to disqualification or removal from office solely on grounds similar to those set out for parent governors at maintained schools under regulations 5 to 8 of the Education (School Government) Regulations 1989;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that the parent governors at the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham city technology college have the same rights to participate in the financial management of the college as will be accorded to parent governors in voluntary schools under local management of schools;

(3) if he was consulted about the provisions of the articles of association of the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham college trust.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. Friend was consulted about the provisions of the articles of association of the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham city technology college trust. In considering these my right hon. Friend took into account the wishes of the CTC trust and the provisions which he considered appropriate for the sound management of the CTC. The same considerations will apply to the scheme of government of the college which will determine the functions of the governing body, including parent governors. As circumstances differ, provisions will not necessarily be identical with those which apply to LEA maintained schools.

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available details of the summary of teacher vacancies, a summary of which he published in September.

Mr. MacGregor: A copy of the Department's survey of teacher vacancies at the beginning of September has now been deposited in the Library.

Official Visits

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report all visits he has made to schools, colleges, universities and other educational institutions, with the date of each visit and its purpose.

Mr. MacGregor: This information can only be provided at disproportionate cost. I continue to make several visits to all types of educational bodies and institutions every week.

UN International Week of Science and Peace

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has any plans to promote the second United Nations International Week of Science and Peace, 5 to 11 November.

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have no plans to commit expenditure in support of this project.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what response she has made to her French counterpart following his announcement made on 22 October seeking increased nuclear weapons co-operation with the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: President Mitterrand and I discussed several subjects of mutual interest while we were in Rome, among them Anglo-French defence co-operation. We welcomed the progress which was being made.

Iraq

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the case for continued sanctions against Iraq, even if it withdraws from Kuwait, to ensure that it is incapable of ever using its nuclear weapons; and if she will make a statement on her policy towards ensuring that other countries which have nuclear weapons do not use them.

The Prime Minister: We have always enforced rigorously export controls pursuant to our obligations under the non-proliferation treaty—NPT—and shall continue to do so. In addition, for the last 10 years we have not sold any lethal weapons to Iraq. We shall need to consider what sanctions may need to be maintained once the present crisis is resolved, in the light of the circumstances then prevailing. As a depositary power of the NPT, the United Kingdom is a keen supporter of the principle of non-proliferation, and we take every suitable opportunity to encourage states not yet parties to the treaty to adhere to it and abide by its provisions.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list by location the number of nuclear reactors that are awaiting pressure vessel temperature gauge replacements to date; what was the position on (a) 1 January and (b) 30 June of this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The question of maintenance requirements for reactor pressure vessel temperature gauges is a matter for the operators of nuclear reactors. Every nuclear reactor pressure vessel in the United Kingdom has a large number of temperature monitoring gauges—thermocouples—many more than are necessary for safe operation. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is satisfied that adequate monitoring of temperature in the pressure vessel does not depend upon all gauges being operative. However, if the NII were not satisfied as to the adequacy of monitoring it would prohibit continued operation of the reactor until the matter had been rectified to its satisfaction.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the amount paid to MCA/Universal Films for the use of the Frankenstein character in Government advertising campaigns.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 29 October, at column 366.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what guidance he issued to electricity companies on the appointment of advisers on electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: This was a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many people have registered to buy shares in the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall be announcing the number shortly.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current effectiveness of his Department's Energy Efficiency Office; and whether he has any plans to change or extend its role.

Mr. Baldry: The Energy Efficiency Office continues to offer a range of effective programmes designed to encourage the adoption of cost-effective energy efficiency measures. Since 1983, the EEO's programmes have led to continuing energy savings now worth over £500 million per year, and greatly increased public awareness of the value of energy efficiency.

The White Paper on the Environment "This Common Inheritance"—Cm. 1200—announced a number of new EEO initiatives under which it would be developing proposals for a new scheme of project management assistance for implementation of energy efficiency projects; considering with the lighting industry a promotional drive on high efficiency lighting; pursuing appliance labelling and minimum standards with our own appliance industry and in the EC.

The EEO will also be introducing the home energy efficiency scheme in the new year. This will offer grants towards the cost of basic energy efficiency measures in low-income households.

The new ministerial committee on energy efficiency, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, will maintain the momentum for energy efficiency improvements, monitor the Government's energy efficiency programmes and assess the need for further action.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the outcome of the first meeting of the ministerial group on energy efficiency held on 17 October.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 25 October 1990, at columns 273-74.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment was made of the impact on the potential generation of electricity from renewable sources by independent generator prior to the decision to decouple the nuclear and renewable elements of the non-fossil fuel obligations.

Mr. Baldry: As my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 12 February, Official Report, column 29, he decided to decouple renewables from the initial order setting a non-fossil fuel obligation so as to enable the large response from renewables operators to be assessed fairly and a full contribution obtained.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of electricity generated in each Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development country comes from (a) renewable energy sources, (b) nuclear power and (c) fossil fuel burn.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage[1] of Total Electricity Generated by:

	Renewable energy sources	Nuclear power	Fossil fuels
Australia	11	—	89
Austria	74	—	26
Belgium	2	61	37

Energy Technology

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the consultancies commissioned by his Department to evaluate the feasibility of developing a methodology for assessing the environmental costs of different energy technologies; in each case, when the contract was issued and when he expects to receive the reports; and what is the total cost of commissioning this research.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has commissioned work at the Energy Technology Support Unit to evaluate the feasibility of developing a methodology for assessing the environmental costs of different energy technologies.

This draws on work within ETSU itself, work by other Government Departments, and sub-contracts managed by ETSU, and has yet to reach a conclusion.

1 Palace Street

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the purpose of the lights inset into the floor in the reception area of his Department's main building at 1 Palace street.

Mr. Wakeham: The lighting in the reception area of my Department's main building was designed and installed on behalf of the building developer. It would be inappropriate for me to speculate on the purpose of particular aspects of the developer's design philosophy.

Electricity Bills

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to requiring the electricity distribution companies to give discounts to families and pensioners who have difficulty paying electricity bills.

Mr. Wakeham: It would not be fair to expect the general body of consumers to subsidise those who cannot or will not pay their bills. However, in recognition that some consumers may experience genuine difficulties, the licences issued to the public electricity suppliers have strengthened the protections against disconnection offered to such consumers. These include easy payment arrangements and, where safe and practical, the installation of prepayment meters.

Petrol Prices

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 22 October, Official Report, column 13, to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, if he will list the instances in which oil companies delayed petrol price increases.

Mr. Wakeham: Between the end of July and the end of September gasoline prices on the Rotterdam spot market rose by over 90 per cent., while oil prices rose by over 140 per cent. Over the same period, United Kingdom pump prices rose on average by around 20 per cent., including tax, and 45 per cent., excluding tax.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy further to his answer of 22 October to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, Official Report, column 15, what proportion of electricity generated in England and Wales in 1989 was generated from coal, oil, gas, nuclear and renewables.

Mr. Wakeham: The proportions of fuel used to generate electricity in 1989 in England and Wales were as follows:

Fuel used in electricity generation[1]

	Per cent. share
Coal	76
Nuclear	18
Oil[2]	7

[1] Coverage relates to those generating companies formerly comprising the public electricity supply system in England and Wales: National Power, PowerGen, Nuclear Electric, National Grid Company, Midlands Electricity and South Western Electricity.

[2] Including oil used in gas turbines and for lighting up coal fired boilers, and orimulsion.

The amount of other fuel sources—natural flow hydro, and natural gas—accounted for less than 0·1 per cent. of the total.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all overseas visits made by himself and other Ministers in his Department, giving the date, duration, purpose and cost, and number of officials involved in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: I and my Ministers have made 22 overseas visits since my appointment as Secretary of State for Energy in July 1989. I shall write to the hon. Member with more detailed information about these visits as soon as possible.

Piper Alpha

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 37, to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), if he will make a statement on the further work under the Piper Alpha abandonment programme.

Mr. Moynihan: A direction was given to Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Ltd. and its co-venturers on 15 August requiring them to carry out as soon as reasonably practicable further works pursuant to the conditions attached to the Piper Alpha abandonment programme as approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Under the terms of the direction the companies are required:

(1) Within the safety zone to re-survey an annulus of internal radius 250 metres and external radius 500 metres to determine the position and dimensions of any remains of the installation and to report the results to the Secretary of State. This survey is to be repeated biennially until the Secretary of State is satisfied that any movement of debris —from within to outside the safety zone—will not cause unjustifiable interference with fishing.

(2) To trawl the area immediately outside the 500-metre safety zone out to a radius of 1,500 metres, to recover debris located by surveys conducted in 1989 and to recover by other means debris too large or heavy to be lifted in a trawl.

(3) To continue to sample sediment, seawater and biota and to examine the samples for PCBs on a biennial basis until the Secretary of State is satisfied that there is no significant risk to the environment from PCBs associated with the transformers formerly located on the installation.

The survey and analysis of sediment, seawater and biota for radioactivity in 1989 showed no contamination as a result of the accident. However, as a safeguard against the future release of any radioactive material held in the debris pile samples will be examined for radioactivity in 1994—five years after the previous survey—and at such times as the Secretary of State may subsequently specify.

HEALTH

Children at Risk

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent to which his Department independently verifies the need to place a particular child on an at-risk register, and the extent to which it verifies compliance with departmental guidelines on such placement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department does not seek verification of this kind. Local agencies, are responsible for the decisions in individual cases and are expected to follow departmental guidance within the established legal framework. The social services inspectorate looks at local child protection services procedures and practices as part of its inspection work and produces reports of its findings.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the numbers of children registered as being at risk in each relevant local authority in England, showing the figures both as numbers of cases and as a percentage of the population of the local authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of children on child protection registers is published in "Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers: Year ending 31 March". The publication also shows the numbers on the register as a rate per 1,000 population under 18. The most recent publication is for 1989 and a copy is available in the Library. Figures for 1990 will be available shortly.

Children in Care

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing what proportion of children taken into care in each relevant local authority are subsequently fostered or adopted.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

A table on children fostered is published in "Children in Care of Local Authorities at 31 March, England". The most recent publication is for 1988—provisional—and a copy is available in the Library.

Work is nearing completion on a table showing numbers of children leaving care on adoption and will be placed in the Library, when completed.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing, for each relevant local authority in England, the average time spent by a child in care before being returned to its family.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information available centrally shows the numbers of children leaving care, but does not separately identify numbers returning home. A table setting out time in care since the child's last change in legal status will soon be available, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Psychotherapy

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the establishment of a statutory register of psychotherapists.

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: The question of a statutory register of psychotherapists is currently being considered. A preliminary meeting was held in September with representatives of some of the various bodies of psychotherapists in order to ascertain their views.

Severely Physically Handicapped People

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting list for receiving special seating for the severely physically handicapped in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) England and (d) Northern Ireland on a comparable statistical basis.

Mr. Dorrell: There are no waiting lists for provision of special seating to severely disabled people in England. The provision of special seating in Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. The provision of special seating in Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on measures to improve the quality of care for people suffering from Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Dorrell: We have recently published details of two initiatives to improve services for people with a mental illness, including Alzheimer's disease. First, from next April health authorities, in collaboration with social services authorities, will be required to introduce more systematic arrangements for assessing the needs of individuals for health and social care. Second, we have announced a new specific grant to local authorities, which should increase expenditure on such care by £30 million in 1991-92.

Hospital Beds, West Midlands

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the number of hospital beds in the West Midlands regional health authority (a) in 1979, (b) in 1985 and (c) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table.

Average number of beds available daily

Year	All Beds	Acute Beds	Acute Inpatients treated	Acute Inpatients per Bed
1979	36,263	14,669	434,673	29
1985	33,108	14,114	520,806	36

Health Authority Meetings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, the arrangements that have been made for community health council representatives to attend their meetings in an observer status; what arrangements have been made for community health council observers to attend the private sessions of these meetings, and any executive meetings held; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Arrangements for access to health authority meetings beyond that provided by the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 is a matter for local discretion by health authorities. This is reflected in current guidance. Details of how health authorities set up and run their meetings are not held centrally.

Doncaster AHA

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans within the next 12 months to visit national health service establishments in the Doncaster area health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit Doncaster health authority.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the current members of the Doncaster health authority giving (a) any appropriate qualifications held and (b) any political affiliation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Trent regional health authority is responsible for appointing the non-executive members of Doncaster health authority. The chief officer and chief finance officer are ex-officio executive members of the authority. Up to three other executive members may be appointed by the chairman and non-executive members acting with the chief officer. Members are appointed for the individual skills and experience they can bring to the National Health Service. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Michael Carlisle, chairman of Trent regional health authority, for details.

Consultants (Distinction Awards)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the amount of distinction awards paid to consultants in each of the health authorities in the Trent regional health authority for the last five years; and if he will make a statement on what the qualifications are for this award.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is shown in the table:

Information on the qualifications for these awards is contained in the Department's booklet "Consultants' Distinction Awards", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Hammersmith Hospital (Fire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has on the cause of the fire in the research laboratories of Hammersmith hospital on 21 October; and whether it involved (a) the release of any toxic materials to the environment injurious of human or animal health or (b) damage to any medical machinery containing radioactive isotopes.

Mr. Dorrell: Officials have received a full report about the fire, which occurred in a building owned by the Royal Postgraduate Medical school. Although the police have not completed their investigation, there is forensic evidence to suggest that the fire may have been started deliberately. There was no release of toxic materials, and no damage to equipment containing radioactive isotopes.

The Gulf

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what preparations are being made within the national health service for dealing with the wounded in the event of the outbreak of hostilities in the Gulf.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authority contingency plans already provide for NHS treatment of military casualties in the event of war. Regional general managers in England have been asked to consider what preparatory measures might be needed under their plans.

Royal Liverpool Hospital

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the names of the proposed trustees for the opting out of the Royal Liverpool hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will announce the names of the chairmen and non-executive directors of NHS trusts after a decision has been made which trusts are to be established.

ENVIRONMENT

Sunday Markets

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 15 October referring to Sunday markets, Official Report, column 621, if he will set out the variety of statutory powers that local authorities have to control Sunday markets; and what assessment he has made as to how effective these powers have so far proved to be;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 15 October referring to Sunday markets, Official Report, column 621, if he will give the geographical location of each Sunday market;

(3) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth dated 15 October referring to Sunday markets, Official Report, column 621, how many representations his Department has received for each of the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning set out local authorities' statutory powers to control markets in his reply on 22 October, Official Report, column 39 to an earlier question from my hon. Friend. We are not aware of any widespread local authority concern about these powers. The Department has no information about the geographical location of each Sunday market.

Information about the number of representations the Department has received about Sunday markets in the last three years is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will itemise the contracts the Lilley Group plc has undertaken for the London Docklands development corporation; whether Mr. Robert Rankin, board member of the London Docklands development corporation, declared an interest when these matters came before the London Docklands development corporation board; and whether he was present during discussions of these contracts;

(2) if he will list the contracts that Mr. David Davies, board member of the London Docklands development corporation has been involved with (a) within the London Docklands development corporation area through the subsidiary companies of D. Y. Davies plc and (b) with the London Docklands development corporation; and whether Mr. David Davies declared an interest in these contracts when they were before the London Docklands development corporation board;

1991-92	13·4
1992-93	8·5

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current cost estimate for the Limehouse link road in London's docklands; and what the estimate was in 1988.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The cost of the Limehouse link road construction contract was estimated at £142 million in 1988 by the London docklands development corporation. The corporation's current cost estimate for the scheme is commercially confidential.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the projected London Docklands development corporation capital expenditure on housing projects in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The London Docklands development corporation has currently budgeted the following amounts for social housing projects:

	£ million
1990-91	8·0
1991-92	8·9
1992-93	4·9

These provisional figures exclude the extensive social housing expenditure associated with the London Docklands development corporation's transport programme.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what review of costs of the London Docklands development corporation transport programme is taking place; who is undertaking that review; what are its terms of reference; how much it is costing; and if it will be published.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The London Docklands development corporation continually monitors and reviews its programmes and budgets. Internal management documents are confidential to the corporation.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands development corporation received in land sales receipts in 1988-89 and in 1989-90; and what are the estimates for 1991-92.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The London Docklands development corporation received £133 million in 1988-89 and £32 million in 1989-90 from land sales. It expects to receive about £28 million land sales receipts in 1991-92.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts the London Docklands development corporation has budgeted for meeting the costs of refurbishment of the Tunnel estates in Southwark for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The LDDC's budget currently includes no provision for this scheme in the years in question.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the costs of the Limehouse link road are within budget projections.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total cost of London Docklands development corporation contractual commitments for 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The London Docklands development corporation is contractually committed to approximately £350 million expenditure in 1990-91.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the London Docklands development corporation community services division budget for 1990-91; and what is the projected budget for 1991-92 and for 1992-93.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The LDDC's community services division budget for 1990-91 and projected budgets for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are currently as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	27·6
1991-92	24·5
1992-93	19·0

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total number of permanent staff and staff on fixed-term contracts that have left the employment of the London Docklands development corporation in 1989-90 and in 1990-91 so far.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Staffing matters are for the LDDC board.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost estimate for the London Docklands development corporation roads programme for each year from 1989-90 to 1993-94.

1991-92	149
1992-93	75
1993-94	66

The provisional amounts include the costs of rehousing associated with the corporation's road schemes, environmental works and project management.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what items budgeted by the London Docklands development corporation for 1990-91 are now being cut from actual expenditure in 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The LDDC's budget includes a wide range of programmes. The precise mix of projects is constantly under review and revision, in the light of changing circumstances and priorities.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimate for grant in aid for the London Docklands development corporation in 1990-91 and in 1991-92.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The provision in the 1990-91 supply estimate for grant in aid for the London Docklands development corporation is £332,975,000 for 1991-92, the corporation has been asked to plan on a basis of £225 million grant in aid.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date for England and Wales, the number of opencast coal site applications that have been refused by his Department;

(2) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date in England and Wales the number of opencast coal sites that received his Department's approval.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is available only from 1 April 1987, in respect of England:

Year	Decided	Dismissed	Allowed
1987-88	15	8	7
1988-89	16	8	8
1989-90	9	2	7
[1]1990-91	10	4	6

[1] (to 30 September 1990).

River Pollution

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of pollution incidents on United Kingdom rivers caused by industrial processes in 1990 and the number of prosecutions that were made as a result of these incidents.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available in the form requested. However, details of pollution incidents and prosecutions during 1989-90 are contained in the annual report of the National Rivers Authority for that period, a copy of which is in the Library.

Water pollution control in Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Departmental Reorganisation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what organisations and sections within his Department presently being housed in London are being considered for dispersal to provincial areas.

Mr. Chris Patten: Some 40 per cent. of the Department's staff already work outside London and around 25 per cent. outside the south-east.

Decisions have been taken to relocate from London 94½ posts in the Department's information systems division, rentcharges unit and housing data and statistics division, as well as in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Additionally, a preliminary study has recently been undertaken of the possibility of relocating the 550 posts in the building research establishment from their present site at Garston in Watford. The results of the study are currently being considered.

Climate Change

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what (a) preparations he is making for and (b) representations he will be making at the next world conference on climate change.

Mr. Trippier: We have been playing an active role in the preparations for the second world climate conference, which takes place in Geneva 29 October—7 November 1990. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be speaking at the opening of the ministerial part of the conference, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make a national statement.

Urban Development Corporations

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why the event planned for June 1989 similar to the event organised by urban development corporations to be held at Lancaster house on 30 October was shelved;

(2) which urban development corporations expressed reservations at board level to him about participating in, and making a financial contribution to, the event organised by urban development corporations to be held at Lancaster house on 30 October;

(3) whether the platform at the event organised by urban development corporations to be held at Lancaster house on 30 October will represent a cross-section of viewpoints on urban development corporations including those critical of their record;

(4) what are the aims and objectives of the event organised by urban development corporations to be held at Lancaster house on 30 October; what is the estimated total cost of the event; and what contribution is being made towards the total cost (a) by his Department and (b) by each individual urban development corporation;

(5) whether local authorities and local authority associations will be invited to the event organised by urban development corporations to be held at Lancaster house on 30 October; and whether they will be represented on the platform.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The presentation at Lancaster house on 30 October was organised by the 11 urban development corporations of England and Wales. A number of dates had previously been considered. The guest list was set by the corporations to include leading members of the business and financial institutions in the United Kingdom and abroad and representatives of several foreign governments. This reflected the objective which was to promote further investment opportunities in the UDC areas. All 11 UDCs gave their full support. The estimated total cost is around £270,000. This will be met from the promotion and publicity budgets of the UDCs. My Department has directly contributed £4,150 for the hire of Lancaster house.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those urban development corporations currently preparing or revising a code of practice required under section 140 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980;

(2) if he will list all the relevant local authorities, as defined in section 140(2) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980, that have formally agreed and support a code of practice prepared by an urban development corporation as required under section 140(1) of that Act;

(3) if he will list those urban development corporations that have prepared a code of practice as required under section 140 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980;

(4) if he will list those urban development corporations that have prepared a code of practice within a period of 12 months after establishment as required under section 140(3) of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All UDCs prepared a code of practice within 12 months of designation, in consultation with local authorities. There is no statutory requirement for formal agreement to be reached with local authorities once the code has been prepared. Black Country UDC is currently reviewing its code and London Docklands is revising its code on development control, having recently issued a separate code covering non-planning consultations. No other UDCs are currently preparing or revising codes.

Poplar Construction Training Centre

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many people who have received training at the Poplar construction training centre have obtained jobs in the Canary Wharf development;

(2) how many people have successfully completed a training scheme at the Poplar construction training centre since it opened.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that 103 trainees have successfully completed courses, of whom 54 went into employment on the Canary Wharf site. Others went on to employment with Canary Wharf constructors on other sites or on other local developments and construction projects.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the criteria used by the Housing Corporation in deciding its allocations for 1990-91.

Mr. Key: The allocation of resources for the support of individual housing association schemes in any year is a matter for the Housing Corporation, within a framework of broad principles which has been agreed with my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish the allocations for each of the last five years by the Housing Corporation for projects in Suffolk, listing the totals for each district and borough council;

(2) if he will publish the bids submitted by each district and borough council in Suffolk for allocations in each of the last five years by the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Key: These are a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have, therefore, asked the corporation to respond to my hon. Friend direct.

Property Services Agency

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Portillo: In May, Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte were commissioned to advise on the privatisation of PSA Services. In the light of their analysis of the markets in which PSA Services operates and the implications of this for the sale I have decided that PSA Services will be restructured into two main businesses, one dealing with project management and design, and the other with maintenance. The security group will transfer to DOE (Property Holdings). The restructuring will make it possible for PSA Services to be offered for sale in more than one part, not necessarily at the same time, but I do not rule out purchase by a single buyer.

Bird Protection

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds or other interested parties responding to his consultation paper on the killing of opportunist bird species, that the protection of specified song birds should be an additional reason for authorising the control of magpies, jays and crows.

Mr. Trippier: A number of respondents to the consultation paper have suggested that the proposed general licences should authorise the control of magpies and crows to protect song birds. We have asked the Nature Conservancy Council for advice on this.

House Repairs

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of tenants who have (a) applied for and (b) received payment for repairs carried out under the right to repairs scheme introduced under the Housing and Building Control Act 1984 in (i) 1986-87, (ii) 1987-88, (iii) 1988-89 and (iv) 1989-90; what is the total cost of payments made under this scheme in each of these years; and what has been the cost to the Government and local authorities in introducing and administering this scheme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of claims received and agreed in each of the years 1986-87 to 1988-89 is shown in the table, together with the total value agreed each year. The collection of data on the scheme has now been discontinued in view of the low level of activity. To date, the Department has incurred total costs of some £40,000 in informing tenants of the scheme and on training them; administrative costs of the scheme are not identified separately. The Department does not collect information on local authorities' costs other than in meeting claims.

England	Total number of claims received for payment	Total number of claims agreed[1] for payment	Total amount agreed[1] £
1986[2]	6	5	500
1986-87	48	44	4,500

1988-89	9	9	600
Total	81	75	7,300

Water Meters

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the probable cost of installing water meters in all households in England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: It would not be meaningful to make such an estimate, because within the framework of the Water Act 1989 decisions on methods of charging are a matter for individual water companies.

The cost of installing a meter in a house depends on a variety of factors. Information on the costs of different methods of installing meters in selected areas is contained in the second interim report on the national metering trials which the water industry published earlier this year. A copy of the report is in the Library.

Water Supply

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what increase in water consumption there has been in each of the regions of England and Wales during the past 10 years.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for consumption are not collected for England and Wales, but estimates of the amounts of water abstracted from surface water and ground water in each of the water authority areas are shown for 1980 and 1988. Figures for 1989 will not be available until early in 1991. Data are given for each water authority area.

[2] The very large increase in abstractions in the Welsh Water area is attributable to increases in demand for water by the CEGB for hydro-electric power generation.
Note: Statistics on water supply are also published in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics, published by HMSO.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the current level of water extraction from bore holes in each of the regions of England and Wales for public water supply purposes.

Mr. Trippier: Figures for abstractions from surface water and groundwater boreholes by purpose and for all regions of England and Wales, are published on an annual basis in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", which is available in the Library.

Planning Orders

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate those occasions in the last five years on which he has used his powers in section 276 (part XV) (applying to section 45(1) part III or section 51) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971; if he will specify on each occasion whether he directed the local planning authority to submit an order for his confirmation, or whether he made the order himself; and where compensation was payable, and where relevant, the amount of compensation and the proportion borne by the Department.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These powers have not been used in the last five years.

Bradford West End

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total value of the scheme currently being discussed between his officials and 3Ds Ltd., for the west end of Bradford; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information has been supplied to officials of Bradford local authority regarding the negotiations between his Department and 3Ds Ltd. concerning the west end development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is not our practice, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, to reveal details of developers' proposals.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many in and out schemes have been approved for Bradford metropolitan district council; what is the value of each scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the in and out scheme which ran from March 1988 to March 1990 the Department approved one application from Bradford metropolitan district council. The approval given on 28 September 1988 for Greengates house involved an additional capital allocation of £10,000.

On 1 April this year, Capital Finance Regulations introduced new in and out arrangements whereby authorities are no longer required to seek the Secretary of State's consent. It is now a matter for them to determine, with the assistance of their legal advisers and their auditor, whether or not particular transactions come within the terms of the regulations. Authorities are not required to inform the Department of the transactions which do so.

Historic Parks and Gardens

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he received from the inspector of historic parks and gardens when he declined to call in Devon county council application No. 90.0539.R4D.

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

Planning Applications

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria are used to determine that a planning application referred to his Department is of no more than local concern.

Mr. Atkins: In general, planning applications are called in for decision by my right hon. Friend only if planning issues of more than local significance are involved. Such cases may include, for example, those which, in my right hon. Friend's opinion, could have wide effects beyond their immediate locality, give rise to substantial regional or national controversy, may conflict with national policy on important matters, and those where the interests of national security or of foreign Governments may be involved.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those planning applications which he has called in during the past 12 months which have been determined as being of more than local concern.

Mr. Atkins: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the use of deemed planning consent.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 25 July, Official Report, column 372.

Keir Hardie

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the bust of Keir Hardie to be transferred from under a desk to the plinth it normally occupies in the Lower Waiting Hall adjacent to Central Lobby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Keir Hardie's bust was put in store for safe keeping while the repairs were carried out to the ceiling of the Lower Waiting Hall where it is normally displayed.

Following completion of the ceiling repairs during the summer recess the bust was brought back last week but it was found that adjustments would have to be made to the plinth—a new one had been made while the bust was away—before it could be redisplayed. It was decided to leave the bust by the security point in the Waiting Hall while the adjustments were made rather than return it to store.

The bust was restored to its usual position on 29 October 1990.

Parish Boundaries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will review the need to establish parish boundaries covering the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: Outside Greater London, it is already the statutory duty of every district council to keep under review the whole of their areas for the purpose of considering whether to propose the constitution or abolition of parishes or changes in parish boundaries. If the Local Government Boundary Commission for England endorses, or itself makes, such proposals, my right hon. Friend has power to implement them. I see no need for a change in these arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to incorporate within existing legislation amendments to give parish councils powers to respond to local need while enhancing the ability of principle authorities to respond to the demands of larger areas.

Mr. Key: Parish councils, like other local authorities, already have powers under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 to undertake expenditure in the interests of their area for which they have no specific powers.

Seaside and Country Dwellings

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the North British housing association receives to act as his agent in administering nominations to Seaside and Country Dwellings.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The fee payable to the North British housing association for its services as the Secretary of State's agent for nominations into Seaside and Country Dwellings is £35,000 in the present financial year.

Yorkshire Residuary Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for the (a) South Yorkshire residuary body and (b) West Yorkshire residuary body the full inventory of items of historic importance they made prior to the abolition of the South and West Yorkshire county councils.

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to lay before Parliament the 1989-90 annual reports and accounts of the remaining residuary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The 1989-90 annual reports and statements of accounts of the London, West Midlands and West Yorkshire residuary bodies were laid before Parliament today. A copy of the Secretary of State's direction under section 78(2) of the Local Government Act 1985 as to the content and structure of the accounts has been placed in the library of the House.

The RBs' reports provide continuing evidence of the impressive progress which they have made in discharging the responsibilities they inherited from the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils. Among other achievements in 1989-90, over £108 million in capital receipts were realised from sales of surplus property, which have been distributed for the benefit of local chargepayers.

EC Groundwater Directive

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has he given to local authorities on the classification of certain substances as required by the European Community groundwater directive 80/68/EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have today published a consultation paper setting out proposals for a centralised national classification scheme of listed substances for the purpose of the EC groundwater directive (80/68/EEC).

The groundwater directive was adopted in late 1979 and came into effect two years later. Its objective is to protect groundwater against pollution from dangerous substances. An annex to the directive lists those substances list I which must be prevented from entering groundwater; and those substances list II where it is necessary to limit their input into groundwater to avoid pollution. Advice on the classification of substances into list I and list II was issued in March 1982 in a joint circular DoE 4/82 WO7/82.

Recent discussions with the European Commission have led to a re-examination of the procedures for classifying substances into list I or List II. New arrangements are set out in a Circular DoE 20/90, WO 34/90—which is published today.

The circular describes the steps to be taken by controlling authorities in assessing whether substances belong to list I or list II. It does not, however, contain precise rules for the classifying process. Proposals on this are contained in a separate consultation paper issued by the Department today.

The consultation paper puts forward numerical threshold values to be used to assess whether substances are list I or list II. In some cases these are shown as ranges to accommodate differing views. Before taking final decisions the Government wish to have the views of industry and other interested parties. The paper also proposes that the scheme should be run by the National Rivers Authority to ensure consistency of application.

The consultation paper is being sent to the Confederation of British Industry, Chemical Industries Association, the National Rivers Authority, Water Services Association, Water Companies Association, representatives of various trade associations, local authority associations and other interested parties. Copies are available in the Library and the Vote Office.

European Community Environment Council

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Environment Council on 29 October.

Mr. Chris Patten: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy and I represented the United Kingdom at a joint session of the Environment and Energy councils, at which a concerted position on the Community's approach to global warming was agreed. This will enable the Community to play a leading role at the second world climate conference. The agreed position endorses the report of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, and recognises the need for a global response to the problem through the negotiation of a framework convention on climate change and related protocols, under the auspices of the United Nations Environment Programme and the World Meteorological Organisation, by the time of the 1992 United Nations conference on environment and development. A concerted position on targets for the stabilisation of carbon dioxide emissions was also agreed which acknowledged the United Kingdom's published programmes.

In the Environment Council, a proposed directive to tighten up emission standards for all classes of cars was discussed. The United Kingdom pressed for early agreement of this directive, and substantial progress was made on resolving many of the outstanding points.

The Council adopted conclusions on the use of economic and fiscal mechanisms as instruments of environmental policy. The Council agreed on the potential importance of such instruments and the need to examine the possible scope for action at Community level. It took note of the European Commission's intention to produce proposals in this area.

Proposed directives on the treatment of sewage discharges and on the management of hazardous waste were both discussed in detail. In each case some progress was made and several outstanding issues were resolved, giving the prospect of agreement in the near future.

The Council discussed a proposed regulation establishing a programme of action for the protection of the Mediterranean—MEDSPA. Agreement was reached in principle on the main elements of the proposal pending receipt of the European Parliament's opinion.

There was also a brief discussion of the proposed new Community regulation on substances which deplete the ozone layer.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (i) the original cost estimate, (ii) the current 1990 cost estimate, (iii) the original estimated completion date and (iv) the current estimated completion date for (a) eastern gateway access road, (b) north Woolwich road widening, (c) Prestons road improvement, (d) Connaught crossing, (e) Westferry road improvement, (f) Canary wharf eastern access, (g) Poplar link including Prestons road flyover, (h) Lower Lea crossing, (i) Limehouse link, (j) West India dock road improvement, (k) East India dock link and (l) the A200 lower road improvement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer, 19 October 1990]: The information available for London Docklands development corporation highway schemes is given in the table:

	Scheme	Original cost estimate £ million	Original estimated completion date	Current estimated actual date
(a)	Eastern Gateway Access Road	11·6	June 1989	October 1989
(b)	North Woolwich Road widening	2·7	May 1989	April 1990
(c)	Prestons Road improvement	0·9	July 1992	July 1992
(d)	Connaught Crossing	22·5	July 1990	August 1990
(f)	Canary Wharf Eastern Access	9	November 1990	November 1990
(h)	Lower Lea Crossing	36	June 1992	February 1992
(i)	Limehouse Link	220
	Stage 1 (Westferry Road Junction)		May 1993	May 1993
	Stage 2 (full scheme)		August 1993	August 1993
(j)	West India Dock Road improvement	8·4	February 1992	February 1992

The original cost estimates and completion dates given above were those estimated by LDDC at the time of DOE scheme approval. The current LDDC estimates of costs are commercially confidential since final payments have not been agreed for the contracts. The contracts for (g) Poplar link and (k) East India Dock link have not yet been let, so the estimated cost of these is commercially confidential.

Lower road improvement is primarily a London borough of Southwark scheme, although the LDDC will make financial contributions. The timetable and scheme cost are matters for agreement between Southwark and the Department of Transport.

The LDDC has no scheme known as Westferry road improvement.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent loans have been agreed with the European investment bank for the development of environmental improvement or protection projects.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 October 1990]: The table lists loans granted by the European investment bank during the last 12 months to finance projects in the United Kingdom concerned with environmental protection.

Date	Name of borrower	Million GBP
21 December 1989	Severn Trent Water	100·00

21 December 1989	Thames Water	75·00
21 December 1989	Wessex Water	63·00
21 December 1989	Yorkshire Water	41·00
05 March 1990	Yorkshire Water	51·50
29 March 1990	North-West Water	50·00
05 April 1990	South-West Water	15·00
03 May 1990	North-West Water	80·00
21 June 1990	Northumbrian Water	20·00
26 June 1990	Anglian Water	50·00

Date	Name of borrower	Million GBP
02 August 1990	Lyonnaise Water[1]	33·00
11 September 1990	Southern Water	40·00

[1] For on-lending to the following statutory water companies: East Anglia Water Company, Essex Water Company, Newcastle and Gateshead Water Company and Sunderland and South Shields Water Company.

The loans have gone towards numerous schemes to ensure the quality and security of drinking water supplies and to upgrade the capacity of sewerage services and waste-water treatment facilities, helping to protect water quality and reduce river and coastal pollution. Supporting capital investment projects which protect the environment or improve the quality of life is one of the bank's main objectives.

Small Businesses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the phasing in of business rate increases under the transitional payment schemes for small businesses.

Mr. Key [holding answer, 30 October 1990]: We have proposed that the limit on rate increases for the non-domestic part of small composite properties, such as small shops with living accommodation attached, should be reduced to 10 per cent. in real terms from 1991-92. This will benefit around 95,000 properties. Otherwise the existing transitional arrangements will remain unchanged.

The Local Government Finance Act 1988 provides powers for a further transitional scheme once the present arrangements end in 1995 and my right hon. Friend will certainly be prepared to use those powers if, after the next revaluation, he considers it necessary to do so. However, it is too soon to tell at this stage what sort of further scheme, if any, would be needed because it is impossible to predict what will happen to rent levels, from which rateable values are derived, over the next five years.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list, with dates of issue, all local authorities which have been issued section 13 notices under the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list, with dates of issue, all local authorities which have been issued section 14 notices under the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

My right hon. Friend will continue to make use of the sanction powers available to him under sections 13 and 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 where it appears to him that a local authority has failed to comply with the relevant provisions of the Act in carrying out work covered by the Act.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take in regard to the London borough of Camden under part I of the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Key [pursuant to his answer, 22 October 1990, c. 40-41]: My right hon. Friend has today issued a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 on the London borough of Camden in relation to refuse collection and street cleaning work. The direction requires the authority to expose this work to competitive tendering again by 1 August 1991, and to obtain the Secretary of State's consent to any decision that the authority's direct service organisation should take part in the new tendering exercise, and also to any decision again to assign the work to the DSO.

Seals

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the seal population in the North sea at present and prior to the epidemic of 1988.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 October 1990]: The Natural Environment Research Council's sea mammal research unit prepares an annual update of the status of the British seal population. Its current minimum estimate of the British population is 108,000 for all United Kingdom waters set against 103,000 before the 1988 epidemic. About half of these are resident in North sea waters.

The epidemic principally affected the common seal population with the mortality rate in British waters up to 50 per cent. in the worst affected area. The British grey seal population has generally continued to increase.

In continental waters of the North sea the mortality rate for common seals was apparently much higher at around 60 per cent. and the population is now estimated to be in the region of 7,000 to 10,000. In addition, there are around 3,000 grey seals resident in Norwegian waters.

Drinking Water, Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each centre of population covered by the Yorkshire water company which receives drinking water which is in breach of European Community nitrate limits.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Out of 191 supply zones, Yorkshire Water Services Ltd. has only five zones in which action to control nitrate levels is necessary. Even in these cases the breaches of the EC nitrates limit have been intermittent. These were Ackworth, Goole, Isle of Axholme, Pontefract and Selby. All supplies will comply with the EC limit by 1995 at the latest and those which do not meet the standard in the interim are not considered to endanger health.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities regarding the impact of community charge capping on the level of services provided by citizens advice bureaux; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations from local authorities about the impact of the caps he has set.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans for amendment of the regulations governing the standard community charge.

Mr. Portillo: We have now completed consultation on a number of proposed changes to the standard charge and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today announced our conclusions. These are that regulations should be brought forward broadly in line with the consultation paper "The Standard Community Charge and other Matters". We intend to make the following changes:

	Maximum multiplier
New classes
Unoccupied property where person subject has sole or main residence in job-related accommodation	[1] ½
Unoccupied property which forms a part of a composite hereditament and which is difficult to let	1
Unoccupied property (eg "Granny" annexes) which forms a self-contained part of a domestic property in respect of which the person is subject to the personal charge and which is difficult to let separately	0
Unoccupied property where person subject is in detention	0
Unoccupied property where person subject is entitled to student relief on the personal charge	0
Unoccupied property which is vacated by a borrower and repossessed by a mortgage lender	0
Unoccupied and empty agricultural property subject to a planning restriction limiting occupation to agricultural workers	½
Amendments to existing classes
Extension to six months of period before which standard charge becomes payable on empty and unoccupied property (Class C)	0
Extension to six months after probate or letters of administration of the period before which standard charge can become payable by personal representative (Class E)	0
Removal of the limit (currently 12 months) on the period for which an unoccupied property is subject to a zero multiplier where the chargepayer is cared for in a home, hospital or any other place (Classes D, FB)	0
Removal of limit (currently 12 months) on the period for which an unoccupied property is subject to a zero multiplier where the chargepayer has gone to care for another person (Class FC)	0

[1] (was 1 in consultation paper)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend existing legislation on local government finance to ensure that parish councils receive a share of (a) community charge, (b) national non-domestic rate and (c) any other central Government funding as of right.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has no plans to amend the existing legislation relating to these matters.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people receiving family credit pay a full community charge.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The information on family credit and community charge benefit will not become available until the results of those benefits' respective statistical surveys are ready.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by his Department (a) on consultants' fees and expenses and (b) otherwise on the proposed housing action trusts in (i) Tower Hamlets, (ii) Lambeth, (iii) Southwark, (iv) Sandwell, (v) Leeds, (vi) Sunderland and (vii) Waltham Forest.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure on those seven housing action trust proposals is shown in the table:

	1 £000	2 £000
Tower Hamlets	182	3
Lambeth	182	12
Southwark	1,411	25
Sandwell	191	17
Leeds	161	13
Sunderland	667	23
Waltham Forest	129	—

[1] Expenditure related to consultancies.
[2] Expenditure related to the Department's information material and to ballots.

Expenditure related to consultancies has covered extensive studies of the physical and social conditions in the areas, the formulation of costed options for improvements and detailed design proposals, and consultation with tenants. The information obtained will inform policies in these and other areas. Expenditure related to information and ballots is in pursuance of the statutory duty under the Housing Act 1988 to hold a ballot of tenants and the need to ensure that the tenants are fully informed of the proposals.

Family Credit

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people receiving family credit pay a full community charge.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The information on family credit and community charge benefit will not become available until the results of those benefits' respective statistical surveys are ready.

WALES

Housing Associations

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the programme he intends to follow in providing additional finances to housing associations in Wales (a) in the present financial year, (b) in the 1991-92 financial year and (c) in subsequent financial years in order to ensure adequate availability of appropriate housing to match the requirements of his programme for the implementation of care in the community.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 29 October, c. 360.

Rehabilitation Engineering

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) is he has any proposals to transfer funding responsibility for the rehabilitation engineering section at Rookwood hospital, Llandaf, Cardiff to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority;

(2) when he next plans to visit the rehabilitation engineering section at Rookwood hospital, Llandaf, Cardiff;

(3) what proposals he has to increase direct funding for the rehabilitation engineering section at Rookwood hospital, Llandaf, Cardiff;

(4) what response he expects to make to the report to him dated March 1990 by the principal scientist and head of the rehabilitation engineering section at Rookwood hospital on the funding and staffing needs for the work of the three rehabilitation engineering units in Wales;

(5) what representations he has had regarding (a) the funding, (b) the staffing and (c) the length of waiting lists for special seating for the severely physically handicapped in Wales;

(6) what proposals he has to increase the capacity of the three rehabilitation engineering units in Wales;

(7) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for special seating for the severely physically handicapped in Wales;

(8) what consultations he has had with organisations representing the physically handicapped in Wales regarding the capacity, staffing and funding of the rehabilitation engineering section at Rookwood hospital, Llandaf, Cardiff;

(9) what is his most up-to-date estimate of (a) the funding and (b) the staffing required to increase the patient cases serviced by the rehabilitation engineering sections in Wales to 1,000 per year;

(10) if he has any proposals to place responsibility for the rehabilitation engineering section under the wing of the artificial limb and appliance service;

(11) what proposals he has to increase the capacity for the rehabilitation engineering units in Wales to meet the needs of patients requiring special seating for the severely physically handicapped.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

A470

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report all those road improvement schemes whose cost is estimated to be in excess of £1 million, on the A470 north-south trunk road in Wales, which are currently either committed, at planning stage or in the preparation pool, indicating for each scheme (a) the approximate length of roadway involved, (b) the standard of road after improvement, and (c) the approximate date or latest information when it is hoped the work will commence.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The following schemes are under construction, all to single carriageway standard:

	Length (Miles)
Llanidloes bypass	2·5
Brecon bypass—Felinfach	1·4
Junction Improvements South of Llangurig	0·8

Details of schemes in the forward programme are shown in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

A487

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those road improvement schemes whose cost is estimated to be in excess of £1 million, on the 487 north-south trunk road in Wales, which are currently either committed, at planning stage or in the preparation pool, indicating for each scheme (a) the approximate length of roadway involved, (b) the standard of road after improvements and (c) the approximate date or latest information, when it is hoped the work will commence.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cardigan bypass, a 1·5 mile single carriageway scheme, is under construction. Details of schemes in the forward programme are shown in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date a public participation exercise took place at Caernarfon for improvements to Port Seiont on the A487 trunk road; on what date a preferred route was announced; when work will commence on this scheme; and when it is expected to be completed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The public participation exercise was held in 1977 and the preferred route announced in 1979. Details of the scheme are contained in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s". The concept of the scheme is currently under review. Construction is expected to take around two years.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Felinheli (Port Dinorwic) bypass on the A487 was first placed in the Welsh Office trunk road preparation poll, and at what estimated cost; and what is his latest estimate of commencement date, completion date and cost for this scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A scheme for bypassing Port Dinorwic was first announced in 1974, and costed in 1975 at some £4·4 milion. The scheme has subsequently been substantially modified; details are set out in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department first drew up plans for the widening and provision of a pavement between Caernarfon and on the Bontnewlydd A487 trunk road; when this work is expected to be undertaken; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Following investigatory work the county surveyor was invited to prepare a scheme in October 1982. There is an outstanding objection to the draft compulsory purchase order. A start of works is unlikely before 1993.

M4

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what, in the context of his Department's plans for improving road links between the M4 and Aberystwyth, is the official route designated for such improvement; whether this entails the designation of any new stretches of trunk road; and what is the target date for completing such improvements.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The main trunk road link is the A470 and A44 via Llangurig. Selective improvements to the A470 route are planned, as indicated in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s". There are no plans to add to the trunk road network.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the Baglan-M4 link to be completed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I expect the M4 Baglan-Lonlas to be completed by 1995.

Roads (Fishguard)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made with regard to improving road conditions in Fishguard.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have consulted the public on proposals for road improvements in West street, Fishguard, and a possible future bypass. We have separately consulted councils and representatives of residents' associations regarding proposals for a relief road at Lower Town. The responses to both consultations are being carefully considered and I hope to be in a position to make a decision in the near future.

Roads and Bridges

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase funding available for local authority roads and bridges in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce details of central Government support in the revenue support grant and local authority capital settlements shortly.

Llanidloes Bypass

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Llanidloes bypass was first placed in the Welsh Office trunk road preparation pool, and at what estimated cost; and what is the latest estimate of the completion date of this scheme, and at what cost.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A scheme for bypassing Llanidloes was first announced in 1969, at a cost of £0·3 million (1969 prices). The scheme was subsequently modified, and is due to be completed in early 1991 at a cost of some £7·5 million.

Community Care

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, Official Report, column 321, on community care implementation, when he expects to send the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth the material referred to in that reply; and when he intends to place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Grist: This material was sent to the House of Commons Library in September and is available there to Members on request.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 18 October, Official Report, column 870, and 22 October, Official Report, column 25, about secure accommodation in Wales, when he intends to provide the hon. Member with the appendices referred to in his letters dated October 1990; and when he intends to place a copy of those appendices in the Library.

Mr. Grist: A copy of the appendices was sent to the hon. Gentleman on Tuesday 30 October 1990 and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the impact of local management of schools on smaller secondary schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend continues to receive representations from individual school governors and school governing bodies. Many of these welcome the opportunities which delegated budgeting brings to them.

School and College Governors (Resignation)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many school and college governors in Wales have resigned since the introduction of the Education Reform Act.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

National Library of Wales

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take as a result of the recent Welsh Office inspection of and report on the national library of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In accordance with the normal procedures for dealing with staff inspection reports, the report has been sent to the national library for comment. No decisions will be taken until consultation with staff at the Library is completed and the Library's management have discussed the report's recommendation with officials of the Department.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what level he proposes to set the totals of revenue support grant and the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for Welsh local authorities in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: I announced on 23 July that I proposed to set the total of aggregate external finance—the level of central Government support for local authority revenue spending—at £1,939 million, an increase of 11·2 per cent. over the comparable level for 1990-91. This support comprises three component elements: the NNDR distributable amount, the total of relevant specific grants, and revenue support grant.

My officials are today sending to Welsh local authorities for purposes of consultation my proposals for these component amounts. I am placing a copy of that letter in the Library. I intend to specify as the distributable amount from the non-domestic rating pool £525 million. In arriving at that amount I have estimated that the Welsh national non-domestic rate multiplier for 1991-92 will be 40·8p; but my final decision on this must await parliamentary approval of the Welsh revenue support grant report.

I am proposing that relevant specific grants towards local authority revenue expenditure will total £174·6 million. Details of the proposed distribution of that total among the various specific grants are set out in the consultation letter.

I further propose that the total of revenue support grant should be £1,239·4 million, of which I propose that £1,238·2 million should be paid to Welsh county and district councils and £1·2 million should be paid to certain specified bodies, in the amounts shown in the consultation letter.

I will shortly be notifying the Welsh local authority associations of my proposals for the distribution and population reports.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has proposals for community charge capping of Welsh authorities in 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today written to the Welsh local authority associations about their budgets for 1991-92. I am placing a copy of that letter in the Library.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce the results of consultation on "The Standard Community Charge and Other Matters: A Consultation Paper for Wales"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I indicated to the House on 23 July that I was consulting on a number of changes which I proposed to make in Wales as a result of our review of the operation of the community charge. A copy of the consultation paper was placed in the Library of the House.

In Wales, 22 responses were received from local authorities and other interested organisations and individuals. The proposals contained in the consultation paper were generally welcomed, and, in the light of those responses, I will be introducing regulations shortly to bring the changes into effect.

There is only one substantive change to the proposals concerning the standard community charge. I have decided that, in the case of the proposals relating to people who are subject to the standard community charge but who have their sole or main residence in job-related accommodation, the maximum multiplier should be a half, rather than one. All other maximum multipliers for the standard charge will be set as proposed. The regulations will take effect from 1 April 1991.

Further regulations will be brought forward to implement the proposals on billing following a change of address, costs of summonses, notifications of entry on the community charge register and attachment of earnings orders. Regulations to implement the proposals on foreign language assistants are already in force.

I also intend to implement the proposal, which was widely welcomed, whereby additional protection will be given to occupiers of small composite properties—such as the shop with living accommodation over—in respect of their business rate liabilities. From 1991-92 the maximum year-on-year increase in real terms in the business rate for these properties will be 10 per cent. rather than 15 per cent. at present.

A further announcement will be made about the treatment of bed-and-breakfast accommodation in the rating system, following consideration of the responses to the recent separate consultation exercise.

Homelessness

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are homeless in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The number of persons within households accepted as homeless during 1989 was 19,168.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of visitors to the United Kingdom admitted in each quarter of 1990 showing the numbers by country of embarkation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is by nationality and is given in the following table. Information for the third quarter of 1990 is not yet available.

Ford Open Prison

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what limitations are placed upon the use of telephones in Ford open prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: Ford prison is an open establishment where all inmates are able to make telephone calls to family and friends.

There are eight telephone card booths available for use by inmates between 0745 to 2100 daily. Prisoners are allowed up to a maximum of seven £2 telephone cards at any time.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions since being imprisoned Mr. Gerald Ronson has been given permission to travel beyond the prison limits, and for what reasons.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since Mr. Gerald Ronson was convicted he has been temporarily released from Ford open prison on one occasion, on 18 October to see his own doctor for an ongoing medical problem.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances business interests can be pursued by prisoners detained in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 15 October at column 725.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers knew that Mr. Gerald Ronson was to see his doctor in London on 18 October; and how many knew the name of the doctor and the location of his practice.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information that Gerald Ronson was to be temporarily released on 18 October was recorded on the prison "daily movements" list and would therefore have been available to all members of staff at Ford.

The information about his destination was known to those members of staff involved in his temporary release.

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of inmates in prisons in England and Wales who have internal sanitation within their cells as of 1 October; what was the number on 1 October 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: As at 8 July 1990, the latest date for which information is available, 24,175 prison places, or about 55 per cent. had access to night sanitation. Of these, 11,608 places had lavatories in cells; the remainder had access through electronic locking systems or unrestricted access.

Similar information is not available for October 1985, but in February 1986, 19,200 places, or 47 per cent., had access to night sanitation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the present number of applicants from inmates in prisons in England and Wales seeking transfers to an open prison; what has been the average waiting time for transfer once it has been approved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department as to the transfer of inmates from one prison to another in England and Wales who are not regarded as either a security or disciplinary risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The prison service seeks to transfer prisoners to appropriate conditions and locations as soon as possible after they have been sentenced. Some low-risk prisoners may be retained to help with the day-to-day operation of a higher-security establishment.

Details of the number of prisoners who are awaiting transfer to open conditions, and waiting times, are not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of new prisons opened in England and Wales; what is the approved staffing levels of such prisons in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The eight new prisons opened in the last five years, together with their current target staffing levels for officer grades, including principal and senior officers and specialists, and the complements for other staff are listed in the table:

Establishment	Opening date	Officer target staffing level	Other staff complement
Wayland	1985	152	98
Stocken	1985	130	94·5
Thorn Cross	1985	81	56·5
Full Sutton	1987	389	128·5
Littlehey	1988	155	108
The Mount	1988	171	89·5
Swaleside	1988	204	101·5
Garth	1988	210	116

The historical data requested are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on deciding the location for visits between prison inmates; what steps are taken to minimise the amount of travelling involved and escort costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Each case is considered individually. Governors are encouraged to minimise travelling distances and costs, and wherever possible to use established escorting links between prisons. Prisoners may be temporarily transferred to the establishment in which their relative is being held, or to one nearby, so that the distance for individual escorts is kept to a minimum. It is sometimes possible to use an established interchange centre as the location for a visit, the prisoners concerned being returned to their establishments the same day.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what surveys have been undertaken at prisons in England and Wales built over 80 years ago and for which plans for the installation of internal sanitation are being considered to ensure that the existing sewer system within the prison is capable of taking the proposed new internal system; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Surveys have been carried out on the extent and condition of sewers and drains at all prisons over 80 years old, for which there are plans to install integral sanitation. As detailed plans are drawn up for each scheme further surveys are being undertaken as necessary, to ensure the additional sanitary facilities are able to function properly.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by whom the allocation of long-term inmates is decided; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Until recently, this was a matter for prison service regional directors, with the exception of life sentence and security category A prisoners who were allocated centrally. Since 25 September, following reorganisation in which prison service regions have now been abolished, the allocation of prisoners sentenced to 10 years or more is determined centrally within the directorate of custody. Shorter sentence prisoners are allocated at establishment level by staff in local prisons.

Prison Hospitals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of agency nurses employed in prison hospitals on 1 October; what rates of pay they were being paid; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Agency nurses are employed by the prison service as a means of filling posts temporarily during periods of acute staffing difficulty when redeployment is not an available option. About 55 posts were wholly or partially covered by agency staff on 1 October. Agency charges vary and information about the charges met by individual establishments is not held centrally. Establishments are encouraged to seek value for money in the purchase of such services.

Age of Consent

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to bring in legislation to ensure that the age of consent for sex between (a) homosexuals, (b) lesbians and (c) heterosexuals is the same; what is the present minimum age of consent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A homosexual act between two consenting men in private is not an offence if both parties have attained the age of 21 years. Sexual intercourse with a girl below the age of 16 years is an offence. Below that age a girl cannot in law give any consent which would prevent a lesbian act from being charged as an indecent assault.

We have no plans at all to amend the law in this area.

Community Charge Liability Orders

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many poll tax liability orders have been granted by magistrates courts in England and Wales at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of liability orders made by magistrates courts is not yet available centrally. An analysis of initial returns from justices' clerks covering the period April to September inclusive is likely to be available before the end of the year.

British Broadcasting Corporation

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a table showing the income earned by the BBC from subscription in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the BBC has not yet earned any money from subscription.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is his intention to publish in full the completed report of the consultancy into the future level of the BBC licence fee.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A decision on possible publication of the report will be made when it becomes available.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will vary the terms of reference of the consultancy into the BBC licence fee to assess whether, as well as how, future increases in the television licence fee can be set below the level of inflation measured by the retail prices index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Work has already begun under the published terms of reference.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to make an ex-gratia payment to the BBC towards the costs incurred by reporting events from the Gulf.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Marriage Guidance

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current level of grant provided annually by his Department to the marriage guidance counselling services; and what plans he has to review the level of assistance.

Mr. John Patten: The grants in aid to marriage guidance organisations for the present financial year are:

Relate	[1]1,306,840
Tavistock Institute of Marital Studies	329,440
Catholic Marriage Advisory Council	131,100
Family Welfare Association	20,140
One Plus One [Formerly the Marriage Research Centre]	14,650

[1] including a special grant of £300,000

Their review is under consideration.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current situation of Somali citizens awaiting entry into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the immigration rules, applications for visas by foreign nationals must be lodged with the entry clearance officer of a British diplomatic post. The application will then normally be resolved by the entry clearance officer without reference to the Home Office. However, because of the current situation in the Horn of Africa this requirement has been waived in respect of Somali refugees—mainly those in camps in Ethiopia and Djibouti—who are unable to go to a British diplomatic post to lodge a visa application. In such cases we have agreed that sponsors in the United Kingdom may present the facts of cases here so that as far as possible applications can be determined before their families need embark on the difficult and sometimes hazardous journey to collect their visas. This has generated a substantial amount of new work for the refugee unit of the immigration and nationality department and in the interests of fairness the applications are dealt with in the order in which they are received.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the income and expenditure account for the administration of citizenship applications for 1989-90.

Mr. Waddington: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the nationality fees income and expenditure account for the 12 months ended 31 March 1990.

Non-custodial Sentences

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number and proportion of offences triable only on indictment which attracted non-custodial sentences in each of the last three years in which the offender was aged over 21 and had previously served a prison sentence.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Information for 1986 to 1988 for persons aged 21 and over given non-custodial sentences for offences triable only on indictment is given in the table.

It is not possible from the data held centrally to identify those offenders who had previously served a prison sentence.

Data for 1989 are not yet available.

Persons aged 21 and over given non-custodial sentences for offences triable only on indictment 1986 to 1988
England and Wales

Year	Total sentenced	Number given non-custodial sentences	per cent.
1986	5,602	1,182	21
1987	6,100	1,165	19

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland (Shopping Restrictions)

150. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on restrictions on shopping in Northern Ireland presently applied by the Republic of Ireland on its citizens; what consideration has been given to the restrictions by the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The European Court of Justice ruled on 12 June 1990 that the restriction debarring citizens of the Republic of Ireland from benefitting from travellers' allowances if they are out of the country for under 48 hours is against European Community law. The United Kingdom Government gave their support to the action of the European Commission in bringing this matter before the European Court. We have persistently urged the Republic of Ireland Government to act on the judgment and remove these restrictions and we will continue to do so.

Concessionary Bus Fares

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the introduction of concessionary bus fares for women on reaching retirement age at 60 years.

Mr. Needham: Ten such representations have been received since 1986.

The qualifying age for concessionary half-fare travel by bus and rail in Northern Ireland is 65 years for men and women. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is precluded by the provision of the Sex Discrimination (NI) Order 1976 from making a distinction on age grounds between men and women.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date the number of opencast coal site applications that have been refused by his Department;

(2) if he will list by location the opencast coal sites currently being worked;

(3) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date the number of opencast coal sites that received his Department's approval.

Mr. Needham: None.

PONI Logo

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Northern Ireland firms have so far applied successfully for permission to carry the logo PONI, made in Northern Ireland; and if he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Needham: While I welcome any initiative to assist Northern Ireland companies with their marketing activities, the PONI scheme is the responsiblity of the Northern Ireland chamber of commerce and industry. The Government do not, therefore, posses the information sought.

Food Labelling

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the correct country of origin is borne on a cheese product marketed by Golden Cow Dairies Ltd., Portadown, called Easi Singles;

(2) whether he will consider taking an appropriate case to the Northern Ireland courts in order to have a legal interpretation of the term "material degree" as used in article 3(7) of EC Food Labelling directive 79/112/EEC;

(3) whether he will make representations to the European Community about the effect of article 3(7) EC Food Labelling directive 79/112/EEC on products which, while manufactured in Southern Ireland, bear labelling with a Northern Ireland address.

Mr. Needham: No. Enforcement of European Community food labelling requirements is the responsibility of district councils in Northern Ireland.

European Community

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider the setting up of a Northern Ireland centre in Brussels to represent Ulster interests to the European Commission and Community.

Mr. Cope: The Northern Ireland interest in EC issues, like the overall national interest, is upheld by the office of the United Kingdom permanent representation in Brussels which includes personnel seconded from the Northern Ireland civil service. I am, therefore, satisfied that, on matters of public policy, the appropriate arrangements are in place. There are many issues—increasingly so, with the approach of the single European market—where there may be a role for independent, non-governmental representation in the EC.

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will obtain a copy of the feasibility report produced by the University of Ulster on a Northern Ireland centre in Europe for his departmental library.

Mr. Cope: A copy of this report has recently been received.

Dyslexia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils attending (a) primary and (b) post-primary schools suffer from dyslexia.

Mr. Needham: The term dyslexia can describe a variety of specific learning difficulties experienced by children and the information is not readily available in the form requested.

It is estimated that some 600 children currently receive assistance for literacy and numeracy problems.

Agriculture

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new financial assistance Her Majesty's Government will give to the agricultural industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I have no plans for assistance beyond the substantial EC and other support already available.

Mr. Aidan Carroll

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding the cases of the Armagh Four; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Representations have been received from a number of politicians, churchmen and others. These have generally sought to question matters considered at the trial, including the admissibility of the men's statements of confession and the weight given by the trial judge to the evidence presented. None of the representations so far received has contained any new evidence on which the Secretary of State could justify referring the case to the Court of Appeal.

Whiterock Road Incident

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the pathologist's reports on the Whiterock road shootings to be completed and a dossier to be forwarded to the Director of Public Prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: As I told the hon. Member in a letter on 14 July, the state pathologist's report on the Whiterock road shootings was submitted to the independent Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland, who is currently considering the case, in July this year.

Teacher Training

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards the integration of teacher training in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Government are committed to the principle of integrated education in Northern Ireland and our policy is to support the provision of such education where it clearly reflects the wishes of those directly involved. No such consensus has emerged in support of the integration of Northern Ireland's two teacher training colleges. There has, however, developed between the colleges an enhanced level of co-operation, including a joint programme for education for mutual understanding and arrangements within which every student will spend part of his or her time in joint study with contemporaries from the other college and undertake teaching practice in schools of both major traditions. The Government have sought to give every possible encouragement to those developments.

In the two university departments of education, teacher training provision has always been fully integrated.

IRA Car Bombs

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to whether any of the persons who were forced by the IRA to drive the car bombs to their destinations on the night of 23-24 October had any connection with the security forces by past or present membership or by the nature of their work.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 29 October 1990]: It would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Local Government Finance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of collecting (a) the regional rate and (b) the local rate in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and what percentage of total rates this represented in each year.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 October 1990]: The cost of collection cannot be disaggregated between the regional rate element and the district rate element. The following table indicates the percentage cost of collection of the total rates due.

	Total cost of collection for Northern Ireland £	Total cost of collection as percentage of total rates
1985-86	3,859,177	1·58
1986-87	4,757,933	1·67
1987-88	4,921,024	1·67
1988-89	5,628,997	1·76
1989-90	5,775,164	1·62

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each of the last five years and the current year the (a) number of local government electors in each council area in Northern Ireland, (b) sum raised in each council area in those years in respect of (i) regional rates and (ii) local rates, (c) sum per elector for each of those years in respect of (j) regional rates and (k) local rates, (d) number of domestic rateable properties in each year and the number of other rateable properties in each and (e) average sum due for each (y) domestic rateable property and (z) other rateable property.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 October 1990]: As the information requested is lengthy, I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place copies of my letter in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Albania

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current relations with Albania.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our outstanding offer to establish diplomatic relations without preconditions remains on the table.

Cambodia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will be taking to pursue the peace plan in Cambodia and encourage all sides to agree to a ceasefire, now that the SNC has been formed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As a permanent member of the UN Security Council, we continue to play a full part in efforts to reach a comprehensive political settlement based on the framework unanimously endorsed by the UN General Assembly on 15 October. We have repeatedly called on all parties to the conflict to stop fighting and co-operate to the full in working out the details of such a settlement.

EC Majority Voting

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the basis of the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the principle of majority voting in the European Community Council of Ministers on environmental and energy legislation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The voting procedure for EC environmental legislation depends on the legal base. Where the main purpose of a measure is environmental protection, it should be based on articles 130R-T of the treaty of Rome (unanimity). Where the predominant objective of a proposal containing a provision relating to the environment is to ensure the free circulation in the internal market of the goods to which it relates, it should be based on article 100A (qualified majority voting). There are no specific treaty articles on energy but, as with the environment, EC energy legislation is also adopted by unanimity or qualified majority voting according to the articles on which individual proposals are based.

Spies

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards permitting families of defectors or admitted spies for foreign states to join them in those states, or in a third country, if the family members express a wish to rejoin the individual defector or spy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All residents of the United Kingdom have the right to travel to any destination of their choice.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any recent discussions with his Soviet and United States counterparts, or their ministerial or departmental colleagues, in regard to the jointly issued statement of 19 October on international strategies to combat nuclear proliferation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the United Kingdom objections to the proposals set out in the document NPT/CONF.IV/L.3, dated 3 September, to the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty by a group of 16 states; and whether the United Kingdom tabled any suggested alternative proposals in regard to timetabling of the preparations for the next full gathering of states parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom and many other countries took the view that it would be inappropriate for the preparatory meetings for the 1995 nuclear non-proliferation treaty conference to begin as early as September 1991 and to be mandated to discuss all substantive matters. We also thought it inappropriate for the conference to adopt resolutions on individual questions. The three depository powers of the NPT (United Kingdom, United States and USSR) tabled an alternative proposal.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the single-sentence amendment proposed by the United Kingdom on a comprehensive nuclear test ban, to the suggested text submitted by the chairman drafting committee on paragraph 7 of the draft final declaration of the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in Geneva on 14 September.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No; the discussions of the committee were not public.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have made any communication with the Mexican Government or the permanent representative of Mexico to the United Nations in Geneva, in response to the statements made by Ambassador Marin Bosch to the final session of the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty on 15 September.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made clear to the Mexican authorities our disappointment that the Mexican delegation to the non-proliferation treaty review conference could not agree to the proposal by the president of the conference for a final document.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which diplomatic meetings the United Kingdom delegation attended outside the Palais des Nations on 14 September, as part of the process of reviewing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom delegation to the non-proliferation treaty review conference attended several informal meetings outside the conference itself.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those non-governmental organisations invited to attend the ministerial briefing and discussion on non-proliferation, verification and disarmament issues at his Department on 23 October; and if he will make a statement on the proportion of time devoted in the meeting to each issue raised, and on the outcome of the meeting.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Thirty-seven non-governmental organisations were invited to this background briefing. The discussions were off the record and wide ranging: it would not be possible to specify how much time was devoted to each of the many issues raised.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he raised at the European Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 22-23 October.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 24 October, c. 220.

Israel

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he raised with Israeli Government ministers or officials during his recent visit to Israel.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs covered a wide range of bilateral and regional issues in his useful discussions with Israeli ministers and officials including the Gulf crisis and the Arab-Israel dispute. He specifically raised the United Nations Secretary General's mission to Israel and urged the Israeli Government to reconsider their refusal to receive this mission.

Iraq

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs if he will make it his policy at the next European Foreign Affairs council meeting to raise with his German counterpart the involvement of German companies in exporting technologies and materials directly or indirectly to Iraq that could assist in the production of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in regular contact with the German authorities over this issue.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses in regard to the current activities undertaken at the military nuclear research facility at Karochooq in Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Iraq has declared to the International Atomic Energy Agency only one nuclear research establishment, at Tuwaitha. We are unaware of the alleged nuclear research facility specified in the question.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has in regard to current status of the tripartite agreement between Iraq, Egypt and Pakistan completed in December 1985, for the construction of a collectively sponsored experimental nuclear reactor at Al-Wadi Al-Jadid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are aware of media reports in December 1985 that talks had taken place with a view to establishing co-operation in the nuclear field between Egypt, Iraq and Pakistan. We do not know of any subsequent developments.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses concerning the current status of the agreement made between Iraq and Saudi Arabia, in March 1989, for the Saudis to finance the rebuilding of the Osiraq nuclear plant in Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As far as we are aware, no such agreement was ever put into effect.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any information in regard to the renewal of the 10-year agreement in October 1989 between Brazil and Iraq, for the provision of low enriched uranium and nuclear technology services to Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that the Brazilian authorities have denied that there is now any nuclear co-operation between Brazil and Iraq.

Disarmament

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has played any role, or offered to assist, in the distribution of the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research report (UNIDIR 90/7).

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the tripartite talks between the ministers of the European Foreign Affairs Council, the European Parliament in Strasbourg on 23 October concerning developments towards European political union.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting on the preparation of the intergovernmental conference on political union which was held on 23 October in Strasbourg. The European Parliament, Commission and member states set out their respective views on possible institutional reforms. No conclusions were drawn, but it was agreed to hold a further exchange of views at a later date.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was made by the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations, or by another United Kingdom representative or Minister, to the proposal advanced by the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister to the United Nations General Assembly in New York, on 16 October, that the prohibition of nuclear testing was essential to stop the proliferation of strategic nuclear weapons.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No response has been given by the United Kingdom permanent representative or other officials to the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister's proposal on nuclear testing. Our position on nuclear testing is already well known.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any nuclear tests conducted by the United Kingdom in Nevada since 1979 have been undertaken for the purposes of enhancing techniques of verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to make public the details of nuclear test programmes.

UN International Week of Science and Peace

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has any plans to support the second United Nations International Week of Science and Peace, 5 to 11 November.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not convinced about the potential value of the UN International Week of Science and Peace. We do not intend to allocate to it resources better employed elsewhere.

Antarctica

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to seek to negotiate a new environmental convention for the regulation of Antarctic minerals which would command all-round support.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are committed to achieving the best possible environmental protection for Antarctica, not just from mineral exploration, but from any other source of pollution. To that end we are ready to discuss all proposals, not only new environmental convention, for improving environmental protection with a view to achieving an agreement that commands consensus by all the Antarctic treaty states.

Sea Bed Sovereignty

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reply has been sent to the Falkland Islands Government in response to the request of the legislative assembly to extend British sovereignty over large areas of seabed.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have taken note of the Falklands Islands Legislative Council's recent resolution calling on us to extend the Falklands continental shelf and to extend the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone.

Legislative councillors are kept fully informed as to our views on this issue both directly and through the governor.

Afghanistan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and Afghanistan at the most recent date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British diplomats were withdrawn from Kabul in February 1989. It is too early to say when they will return. The Afghan embassy in London remains open under a chargé d'affaires.

Somalia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations between Britain and Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We seek to use our relations with Somalia to encourage national reconciliation, democracy and respect for human rights in that country.

Kuwait

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government intend to publish a paper giving the details of the terror in Kuwait since its illegal annexation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A copy is being placed in the Library of the House of a Foreign and Commonwealth Office briefing note entitled "The Rape of Kuwait".

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of ivory exported from Hong Kong since midnight on 17 July.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 17 October]: No commercial exports of ivory have been authorised since midnight on 17 July.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current total of all ivory known to be held in Hong Kong; and on what date it was assessed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 17 October]: The total stock of commercial ivory held in Hong Kong on 17 July 1990 was 463 tonnes, to the nearest tonne. No commercial exports of ivory have been authorised since then.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 23 July, Official Report, column 105, if the information on the countries of origin of tusks held in Hong Kong has been forwarded to the Worldwide Fund for Nature (Hong Kong).

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 18 October]: The compilation of information on the countries of origin of tusks held in Hong Kong is nearing completion and will be forwarded to the World Wide Fund for Nature (Hong Kong) shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many spot checks have been made by the Hong Kong authorities on ivory-holding premises since June 1990; and if any irregularities were discovered.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current number of possession licences issued to holders of ivory stocks in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 October]: As at 17 October 1990, the number of possession licences issued to commercial ivory stock holders in Hong Kong was 985. This figure includes both licences issued for ivory with CITES documentation and the separate licences issued for ivory without such documentation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any ivory has been confiscated by the Hong Kong authorities since 17 July; and if any prosecutions for illegal export have been entered since the same date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 October]: A total of 19·7 kg of worked ivory was seized by the Hong Kong authorities between 17 July 1990 and 17 October 1990. This ivory will be confiscated if the prosecutions arising from these seizures result in convictions. Two prosecutions for illegal export involving 59 kg of worked ivory have been entered since 17 July 1990, but these prosecutions relate to seizures made before that date.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Hong Kong authorities in identifying the source of the 960 kg of ivory name seals seized by Japanese customs officers; and if any prosecutions have been pursued.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 19 October]: The source of the 960 kg of ivory name seals seized by Japanese customs officers has been confirmed as being Hong Kong. Four persons suspected of being involved in the illegal export of this ivory have been investigated, but no prosecution has been entered for lack of evidence.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

World Bank Loans

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom representative on the board of the World Bank supported the decisions to give development aid loans for the Sardar Sarovar dam in India and the Carajas iron ore mine in the Brazilian Amazon rain forest.

Mrs. Chalker: It is not the policy of the British Government to disclose instructions to our executive directors in the World Bank or other international financial institutions.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Industry

152. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the profitability of manufacturing industry in 1989 and at the beginning of the decade.

154. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the profitability of non-North sea industrial and commercial companies in 1989 and at the beginning of the decade.

158. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the relative profitability of manufacturing industry in 1989 and at the beginning of the decade.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The net real rate of return on capital employed by non-North sea industrial and commercial companies is estimated to have been 8·3 per cent. in 1989, compared with 3·9 per cent. in 1980. For manufacturing companies the net real rate of return on capital employed is estimated to have been 7·4 per cent. in 1989, compared with 3·1 per cent. in 1980. Full details may be found in Business Bulletin issue 79/90, published on Thursday 25 October 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Balance of Trade

155. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current United Kingdom balance of trade.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the third quarter of this year the United Kingdom's visible trade deficit was £3·8 billion. This compares with £5·2 billion in the previous quarter and £6·6 billion a year earlier.

153. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the size of Britain's trade deficit.

156. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the size of Britain's trade deficit.

157. Mr. Snape: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the size of Britain's trade deficit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are clear signs that the visible trade deficit is falling as domestic demand pressures ease. In the third quarter of 1990, the UK's visible trade deficit was £3·8 billion. This compares with £5·2 billion in the previous quarter and £6·6 billion a year earlier. Export volumes, less oil and erratics, have risen 8 per cent. over the past year while imports were unchanged.

Incomes

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the income gap difference between average pre-tax income per family per week in the south-east and all other United Kingdom regions in current prices for 1979 and 1989;

(2) what is the income gap difference between average income after tax per family per week in the south-east and other United Kingdom regions in current prices for 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Maude: Available information based on the annual survey of personal incomes is given in the tables. Information relates to tax units (single people and married couples) with income above the pay-as-you-earn threshold regardless of whether they are liable to income tax. I regret that it is not possible to provide a regional breakdown for years subsequent to 1987-88.

Foreign-owned Businesses

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the United Kingdom work force is employed by foreign-owned businesses.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply. Information is available only for manufacturing industry where it is estimated that, in 1988, 13 per cent. of the work force was employed by businesses controlled or owned by companies incorporated overseas.

Statistics

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing the number of civil servants employed in the gathering and publishing of statistics in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maples: The table gives the total number of staff in the Government Statistical Service (GSS) from 1978 to 1988-89, the last year for which such information is available.

Much of the decrease shown in the table results from widespread computerisation of statistical services, which has reduced the need for clerical support. The number of staff in the statistician group (the professionally qualified part of the GSS) increased from 566 on 1 April 1978 to 599 on 1 April 1988, reflecting a continuing level of professional input to the collection, analysis and dissemination of statistical information.

Much data-gathering for the GSS is carried out by staff who are not members of the GSS and some statistics are published by non-GSS staff. The work of the GSS covers more than simply gathering and publishing statistics.

The number of staff in the Government Statistical Service[1] 1978 to 1988-89

Year	Number of staff[2]
1978	6,157
1979	6,131
1980	5,909
1981	5,587
1982	5,211
1983	4,707
1984	4,469
1985-86	[3]4,592
1986-87	[4]4,767
1987-88	4,254
1988-89	4,228

[1]The Government Statistical Service is decentalised and its boundaries are liable to change over time. This table collects together figures from many departments.

[2]At 1 April.

[3]From 1985-86 onwards the number of staff figure represent the number of man-years in the GSS during the financial year.

[4]Man-years forecast.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a table showing the expenditure in real terms, corrected for inflation, on the gathering and publishing of statistics by Government in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maples: The Government's statistical service is decentralised and the information requested is therefore not available.

Regional Spending

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will show for each region in table 11.4 of "Regional Trends"—1988—or the subsequent year, the breakdown of the item "Public Administration and Defence" into the sub-categories (a) agriculture, (b) trade and industry, (c) employment, (d) transport, (e) environment and (f) law enforcement showing separately the spending on health and education services.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is not available.

The latest estimates of gross domestic product by industry group are published in the 1990 edition of "Regional Trends" at table 12.2. Provisional estimates for 1989 will be published in the November edition of "Economic Trends". The sample surveys on which the figures are based do not disaggregate public administration and defence.

Official Report

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the price of the Official Report.

Mr. Maples: Following a review by HMSO, I have authorised increases of £1 in the prices of the daily part and Standing Committee debates and of £3 in the price of the weekly part. Rather lower percentage increases have been authorised for other Hansard items. Subscription rates will be adjusted accordingly and the scale of charges for reprints of Members' speeches appearing in the Official Report will also be raised. These increases, coupled with continued careful control of production costs, are further steps towards eliminating the central subsidy required, which has been progressively reduced from £6 million in 1983-84 to a forecast £1·2 million for 1991-92. The rises will come into effect from the beginning of the new Session.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of manufacturing productivity in the United Kingdom and other G7 countries during the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

In the 1960s Britain had the slowest rate of growth in manufacturing productivity of any of the major seven industrial countries. In the 1970s we again had the slowest rate of growth of manufacturing productivity of any of those countries. In the 1980s we have had the fastest rate of growth of manufacturing productivity of any of those countries.

THE ARTS

Public Libraries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on reductions in (a) book fund expenditure, (b) opening hours and (c) the number of public libraries in the current financial year, by public library authority.

Mr. Mellor: I will not have a full picture of public library expenditure in England for 1990-91 until the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy has published its statistics early in 1992. I am aware of reductions by some library authorities in book fund expenditure, opening hours and temporary closure of branches. I particularly deplore the decision of Derbyshire county council to close 11 libraries about which I am making inquiries.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing the rate per loan of the public lending scheme for the years in which the scheme has operated (a) in cash terms and (b) adjusted for retail prices index inflation.

Mr. Mellor: The table shows the public lending right scheme rate per loan in cash terms, and in real terms using the Government's gross domestic product deflator.

Year	Rate per loan
	Cash pence	At 1989-90 prices pence
1983-84	1·02	1·40
1984-85	0·92	1·20
1985-86	1·27	1·58
1986-87	1·20	1·44
1987-88	1·12	1·28
1988-89	1·45	1·54
1989-90	1·39	1·39

Lieu of Tax

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister for the Arts, if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since he last made an announcement on the subject to the House.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to the reply, 20 April 1990, c. 1042]: I am pleased to announce the acceptance of a collection of works by and relating to John Piper in lieu of £137,918 tax. A decision on the allocation of this collection has yet to be taken but I have decided to allocate a number of offers accepted in the last financial year as follows: the painting "Richmond près Londres" by Corot shall go to the London borough of Richmond upon Thames for display in Orleans house; the Constable painting "Farm Cart with Horse in Harness" will go to the Ipswich museum and the Kirckman harpsichord will be allocated to the Manchester city art gallery for display and to use in recitals at Heaton hall. Finally I would like to inform the House that a further payment of £360 has been made to the Inland Revenue in relation to the acceptance in lieu of the Beechey painting announced on 20 April. The total tax satisfied by the acceptance of this painting is therefore £151,849.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about progress and future plans on the creation of agencies.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 29 October 1990, c. 724]: The Government are today publishing their reply (Cm. 1263) to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's helpful report of progress in the "next steps" initiative.

In addition, following my predecessor's announcement to the House on 2 April at columns 386-89, the Government are today publishing the first review of the "next steps" agencies (Cm. 1261) showing summaries of developments and results in individual agencies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will provide for Paisley social security office the information on social fund budget and crisis loans provided in his reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) of 25 January, Official Report, columns 809-12;

(2) if he will provide for each of the local social security offices in Renfrew district comparable information to that provided in his answer of 6 July to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), Official Report, column 721, for the years (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87, (c) 1987-88, (d) 1988-89 and (e) 1989-90;

(3) if he will list for each social security office in Renfrew district the number of social fund applications (a) submitted and (b) rejected on grounds of insufficient priorities since 1 July in each of these categories: (i) grants, (ii) budget loans and (iii) crisis loans.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund loan applications were refused in the London borough of Newham in the financial year 1989-90 and 1990 to date due to perceived inability to repay; and what general advice was offered to those refused.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 19 October 1990]: The table shows the number of applications recorded as refused on grounds of inability to repay.

	April 1989 to March 1990	April 1990 to September 1990
Canning Town	36	21
Plaistow	38	15
Woodgrange Park	45	30

All decision letters advise applicants of their right to ask for a review and refer to the citizens advice bureau or a local law centre as a source of general advice. Money advice is normally offered to applicants discovered to be in financial difficulties, including such cases where an applicant is refused because of a perceived inability to repay.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many applications for review were received during the period (a) April 1988 to March 1989 and (b) April 1989 to March 1990 in respect of (i) community care grants, (ii) budgeting loans, and (iii) crisis loans by each of the local offices covering the Doncaster area; and if he will show in his answer how many of these applications for review resulted in revised decisions;

(2) if he will list for each social security office covering the Doncaster area, the number of social fund applications (a) submitted and (b) rejected on grounds of insufficient priority, for the 12-month period ended 30 September, in each of the categories (i) grants, (ii) budget loan, and (iii) crisis loans.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for unemployment benefit are being referred to claim income support as a result of the actively seeking work test in (a) Leeds, West and (b) England and Wales.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not kept and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers of (i) claimants, (ii) dependants and (iii) total numbers dependent on income support in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information for 1985 and 1990 is unavailable. The information for the years 1979-84 and 1986-89 is in the table.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representation he has received from the Disability Benefits Consortium in support of a comprehensive disability income scheme; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The constituent groups within the Disability Benefits Consortium have long advocated such a scheme and we discussed the proposal in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cmd. 917). We concluded that an elaborate disability income striving to cover a whole range of specific needs would be much more complicated than existing benefits and produce an unacceptable number of losers. The prime objective must be to provide a system which can get help quickly and effectively to those most in need.

Children

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of Scottish children (a) in total and (b) as a percentage dependent on supplementary benefit and income support in each year since 1978.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information for 1985 and 1990 is unavailable. The information for the years 1978-84 and 1986-89 is in the table.

Child Benefit

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in reciept of child benefit; how many are top rate taxpayers; and what is his most recent estimate of the cost of paying child benefit to top rate taxpayers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Child benefit is paid to about 7 million people—mostly mothers—in the United Kingdom. It is estimated that around 0·1 million of these recipients pay tax at the higher rate in 1990-91 and receive child benefit amounting to about £57 million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) pensioner households, (b) families with children and (c) other households who are tenants of (i) local authorities and new towns, (ii) housing associations and (iii) other landlords, are estimated to be receiving (x) maximum housing benefit with no deductions for non-dependants, (y) maximum housing benefit but with deductions for non-dependants and (z) a lesser amount of housing benefit, towards their rent payments currently, and over the previous five years, in Great Britain as a whole, and in each region for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total number of tenants in each category they represent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The available information is given in the table. Comparable information is not readily available for years prior to the introduction of the reformed scheme in 1988-89, and is not separately available for families with children or for tenants of housing associations. "Pensioners" include those entitled to the pensioner premium, and therefore includes all persons aged 60 and over. Table 3 will contain a small number of cases who, though not receiving income support, are nevertheless entitled to maximum housing benefit; it is not possible to isolate these.

Students' Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the total number of students is exempt from disentitlement to social security benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about the proportion of students who will retain entitlement to income support and housing benefit is not available. No full-time students will be eligible for unemployment benefit, but all students will retain entitlement to all other social security benefits in the normal way.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions were made for those students claiming income support, unemployment benefit and housing benefit for the period from 1 September until the start of their academic year, for (a) those students making a claim before 1 September and (b) those students making a claim after 1 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Those students who were in receipt of income support, unemployment benefit or housing benefit immediately prior to 1 September were able to continue receiving those benefits until resumption of their studies. Students claiming after 1 September were not eligible for income support, unemployment benefit or housing benefit unless they fell into one of the categories of vulnerable groups (including lone parents and disabled students) who retained entitlement to those benefits. In addition, partners of students would have been able to claim these benefits in the normal way.

Students who faced financial difficulty in the vacation would have been able to apply to their local education authorities, which have the discretion to make awards to students who may suffer undue hardship.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many full-time students are still able to claim housing benefit during their period of study in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimates of the number of students who may be entitled to housing benefit are not available.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers of students still able to claim social security benefits into (a) single parents, (b) students with disabilities, (c) student couples, (d) pensioner students and (e) students under 19 years in further education.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not possible to provide a breakdown of students still able to claim income support and housing benefit. No full-time students will be eligible for unemployment benefit, but all students will retain entitlement to all other social security benefits in the normal way.

Deaf Students

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether regulation 5(3) of the Income-Related Benefits Amendment Regulations 1990 applies to deaf students coming from Northern Ireland who are studying in England, Wales or Scotland.

Mr. Scott: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's guidelines for the use of the Welsh language by his Department in Wales.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Members for Welsh constituencies have already been provided with copies of the recently revised DSS policy statement on use of the Welsh language, and guidelines for departmental staff in Wales. I will now arrange for copies to be placed in the Library.

HELIOS Programme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evaluation he is undertaking of the HELIOS programme local model projects promoting social and independent living; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department of Health in consultation with the Department of Employment and other interested Departments has now commissioned the centre for evaluative and developmental research at the university of Southampton to carry out an evaluation in respect of the 15 local model activities within the United Kingdom that are participating in the European Community's second action programme in favour of disabled people, called HELIOS. These activities cover vocational rehabilitation, economic integration, and integration in schools as well as social integration and independent living. The evaluation will not cover all aspects of the local model activities but will be limited to an assessment of the impact of the HELIOS programme on their work.

Grants and Loans, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for review were received during the period (a) April 1988 to March 1989 and (b) April 1989 to March 1990 in respect of (i) community care grants, (ii) budgeting loans, and (iii) crisis loans by each of the local offices covering the Doncaster area; and if he will show in his answer how many of these applications for review resulted in revised decisions.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

HANDYNET

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the United Kingdom's financial contribution to HANDYNET in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The European Community's second action programme in favour of disabled people, called HELIOS, includes the development of a system, called HANDYNET, to link national databases on disability, initially for equipment. We have nominated the Disabled Living Foundation as the first United Kingdom centre to participate in HANDYNET, which has yet to come into operation. Most of the costs of taking part in the system will be incurred within the member states and will not be met from Community funds. We have already given the Disabled Living Foundation a grant of £228,000 to enhance its information service facilities and enable it to participate in HANDYNET in due course. We are considering a request from the foundation for further support once the system comes into operation.

Executive Agencies

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Lord President of the Council if, pursuant to his statement of 5 July, Official Report, column 1139, he has considered further the arrangements for answering parliamentary questions on matters delegated to executive agencies.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the White Paper (Cm. 1263) which the Government have published today in response to the eighth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, "Progress in the Next Steps Initiative". In its supportive report, the Committee made some observations about the procedure for dealing with Members' questions on matters delegated to executive agencies. The Government's reply makes clear that it is for the Minister responsible for an executive agency to decide the most helpful and appropriate way to respond to such a question: normally, he or she will ask the chief executive to respond by letter. In future, a copy of all such letters (save only for personal or confidential cases) will automatically be placed in the Library and in its Public Information Office. Where a case appears to be of immediate wide interest or it is desirable that it should be covered by parliamentary privilege, the Minister may decide to reply fully in Hansard.

We shall keep these arrangements under review. As the White Paper says, the Government's intention is that the establishment of "next steps" Agencies should improve the flow and quality of information to Parliament and the public and help to ensure that replies about management and delivery of Government services are full, prompt and as helpful as possible.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage unemployment in the Paisley, North constituency for each quarter since January 1979.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment rates are not available for parliamentary constituencies and figures for the number unemployed by parliamentary constituency are available only from June 1983. The table shows the number of claimants unemployed in Paisley, North from the third quarter of 1983 to the third quarter of 1990 inclusive.

Number of claimant unemployed in Paisley North constituency

Year	Quarter 1	Quarter 2	Quarter 3	Quarter 4

1984	5,737	5,517	5,462	5,418
1985	5,622	5,703	5,700	5,613

1989	4,136	3,702	3,544	3,318
1990	3,305	3,161	3,105	—

Notes:
Figures are averages for the quarter.
Comparisons over time are affected by the changes in the coverage of the count that have occurred over the period, as well as by seasonal influences.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent figure for the ratio of vacancies in Scotland to those seeking work.

Mr. Lang: In September 1990 there were 24,500 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in Scotland, and 195,100 claimants unemployed. This gives a ratio of unfilled vacancies to claimants unemployed of 1:8. It is estimated that only about one third of vacancies in the economy are notified to jobcentres.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been created and how many lost in Paisley, North constituency in (a) each year and (b) the cumulative total in (i) the clothing and textile industry, (ii) engineering, (iii) electronics and computer assembly, (iv) construction, (v) manufacturing, (vi) distribution and (vii) service industries.

Mr. Lang: Up-to-date information on jobs created and lost is not available.

Manufacturing

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what percentage the Scottish contribution to United Kingdom manufacturing declined from 1979 to 1989, or to the most recently available figure.

Mr. Lang: Estimates of gross domestic product at factor cost published by the Central Statistical Office show that in 1979 Scotland contributed 8·5 per cent. of the United Kingdom gross domestic product (excluding continental shelf) in manufacturing. Provisional estimates for 1988 give a Scottish share of 8·1 per cent. of United Kingdom manufacturing gross domestic product (excluding continental shelf). Provisional estimates for 1989 will be published in December.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the change (a) in the number of employees in employment and (b) the number of employees in employment in manufacturing in Scotland between 1979 and 1989; and what this represents in percentage terms.

Mr. Lang: The number of employees in employment in Scotland decreased by 143,000, from 2,102,000 in June 1979 to 1,959,000 in June 1989. This represents a decrease of 7 per cent. The number of manufacturing employees in employment in Scotland decreased by 188,000, from 604,000 in June 1979 to 416,000 in June 1989. This represents a decrease of 31 per cent.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of Scottish manufacturing exports in real terms in each year since 1974.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Council (Development and Industry) carry out an annual survey of Scottish exporters. This is the most comprehensive source of information on Scottish manufacturing exports. Up until 1984, the survey was carried out only on a triennial basis and coverage was less complete than in later years. These points should be borne in mind when interpreting the series in the table, which is expressed in 1988 constant prices using the council's own suggested deflator; the United Kingdom producer price index for home sales of manufactured goods.

School Qualifications

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the Scottish work force has no qualifications; and what percentage of Scottish school leavers leave school with no qualifications on the most recently available figures.

Mr. Lang: The latest information from the labour force survey shows that in spring 1989, 29 per cent. of the Scottish work force had no qualifications. In 1987-88, the lastest period for which figures are available, 15 per cent. of Scottish school leavers had no SCE qualifications.

Industrial Assistance

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing expenditure on regional preferential assistance to industry in Scotland for each year from 1974 to the most recently available date in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is given in the table:

Manufacturing and Electronics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) Scottish and (b) United Kingdom gross domestic product was derived from (i) manufacturing and (ii) electronics in (y) 1979 and (z) 1989.

Mr. Lang: The table gives the information requested for 1979, and equivalent information for 1987 and 1988 where this is available. Provisional estimates for 1989 will be published in December.

Opencast Mines

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date the number of opencast coal sites that received his Department's approval;

(2) if he will list by location the opencast coal sites currently being worked;

(3) if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date the number of opencast coal site applications that have been refused by his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under current legislation my right hon. and learned Friend would deal only with applications for opencast coal operations which came before him on appeal. Up to 29 February 1984 opencast coal site applications were the concern of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. Thereafter, under transitional arrangements, they transferred to my right hon. and learned Friend until the local planning authorities assumed responsibility on 11 December 1987. Since 1984, eight cases have been the subject of appeal, four of which were sustained and four dismissed. I understand from British Coal (Scotland), which holds central records, that the full detail of sites approved, applications refused and current workings is as follows:

Migration

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the net out-migration from Scotland in each year since 1979; and what percentage decline in population this represents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information on annual out-migration is given in the table. The total net out-migration of 156,000 over the period 1979-89 represents some 3 per cent. of the population of Scotland in 1979.

Dampness

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most accurate recent estimate for (a) the number of Scottish houses affected by damp and (b) the number of people living in conditions of (i) damp, (ii) severe dampness and (c) the number of children in each category.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On the basis of returns made annually by local authorities to the Scottish Development Department it is estimated that at 31 March 1989 there were 48,597 Scottish local authority houses affected by rising and penetrating dampness and 82,827 affected by rising and penetrating dampness and condensation. Information is not available on the number of houses affected by dampness in other tenures, and the number of people or children living in houses affected by dampness.

Fixed Capital Formation

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of total United Kingdom gross domestic fixed capital formation in (a) all industries and (b) manufacturing originated in Scotland in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1989 or the most recently available year.

Mr. Lang: The table provides the information requested for 1979 and 1987: estimates for 1988 will be published in December. There are no estimates of gross domestic fixed capital formation (GDFCF) for Scotland for all industries, because there are no regional data on GDFCF in most service industries. The figures given cover those industries for which estimates are available.

[1] Figures for 1979 are not entirely consistent with those for later years. However the differences are thought to be small.

[2] The industries covered are agriculture forestry and fishing, energy and water supply, manufacturing, transport and communication (excluding shipping and air transport) and dwellings.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is (a) the total grant awarded to Scottish local authorities, (b) the relevant expenditure of Scottish local authorities in cash and real terms and (c) the grant as a percentage of relevant expenditure in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Notes:

(1) The figures in column 1 represent the original amount of rate or revenue support grant awarded for each year. These may have been subject to a later redetermination.

(2) In column 4 the figures are for current expenditure including loan and leasing charges and are at final outturn to 1988-89, provisional outturn for 1989-90 and budget estimate for 1990-91.

(3) Conversion to real term figures in column 5 is by means of the Treasury GDP deflator (March 1990). All years are at 1988-89 prices.

(4) Non-domestic rate income is excluded on the grounds that although since 1989-90 the level of NDRI has been controlled by central government and formed part of aggregate external finance, this was not the case in earlier years when business rate levels were set by local authorities.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list education expenditure in Scotland in (a) real terms, (b) as a percentage of Scottish Office expenditure and (c) as a percentage of Scottish gross domestic product in each year since 1979-80 to planned expenditure 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Public expenditure on education includes expenditure both by the Secretary of State directly and by education authorities. Details are as follows:

Year	Expenditure by Secretary of State directly Real terms (£m at 1988-89 prices)	Expenditure by Secretary of State and education authorities Real terms (£m at 1988-89 prices)	Column (2) as a percentage of Scottish GDP

Salmon Fishing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the reasons for the reduction in the numbers of wild salmon returning to west coast rivers this season; whether he plans to take any action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Statistical returns for the catches of salmon in Scotland in 1990 will not be available until well into 1991. There have, however, been informal indications that 1990 catches are likely to be low throughout Scotland. The reasons for this are not yet understood, but might include late runs after the end of the fishing season, and increased mortality of fish at sea. The matter will be kept under review.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by location the establishments that produce radioactive (a) high-level waste, (b) intermediate-level waste and (c) low-level waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of high, intermediate and low-level wastes at nuclear sites in Scotland are included in a report prepared for United Kingdom Nirex Ltd and the Department of the Environment entitled, "The 1988 United Kingdom Radioactive Waste Inventory" (DOE/RW/89-088). Other users of radioactive materials produce low-level waste and the names and addresses of those authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 to accumulate or dispose of such waste are included in the register of registration and authorisations maintained by HM industrial pollution inspectorate for Scotland. Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

Police Establishments

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the authorised police establishments in Scotland for each of the last five years.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested as at 30 September in each year is as follows:

Force	Authorised Police Establishment (as at 30 September) 1986	1987	1988	1989	1990

Mental Illness

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures on annual expenditure on mental illness by each health board in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of moneys to be allocated per Scottish health board area for the care of the mentally ill in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 October 1990]: Allocations to health boards are not earmarked for specific purposes. It is for boards themselves to decide their priorities for expenditure within the amount available to them. We are, however, introducing from 1 April 1991 a new grant to encourage community care projects which will benefit people suffering from mental illness. The grant will fund local authority expenditure of £3 million on these projects in the first year.

Coastal Areas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take regarding policy towards the management of coastal areas, in the light of the report of the Marine Conservation Society entitled "A Future for the Coast", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's intentions in respect of the marine environment in Scotland were outlined in paragraphs 7.69, 20.12 and 20.13 of the White Paper on the environment (Cm. 1200). In considering the matter further we will take account of the Marine Conservation Society's views.

Loch Sween

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress with the decision whether to designate Loch Sween as a marine nature reserve.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Nature Conservancy Council issued a discussion document on 4 October on the proposal to designate Loch Sween as a marine nature reserve. This is the first stage in a process of public consultation which will ensure that the views of local people and organisations are fully considered before an application is made by the council to my right hon. and learned Friend for statutory designation of the area under section 36 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. A copy of the consultation document has been placed in the Library.

Purse Seine Net Fishermen

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department has taken, over the past five years, to monitor the activity of purse seine-net fishermen in Scottish waters.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are about 50 vessels in the Scottish fleet which regularly fish using the purse seine method. Because of their high catching capacity all such vessels are carefully monitored while at sea and in port. In 1989, the only year for which data are readily available, there were 109 sightings of purse seine vessels by fisheries protection aircraft and ships and 42 boardings at sea.

Cardiac Bypass Patients

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board area the total number of intensive care beds specifically allocated per hospital for the after-care of cardiac bypass patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to provide the information in the form requested since intensive care beds attached to cardiac surgery units are not specifically allocated for the after-care of cardiac bypass patients only.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase the total number of intensive care beds and staff in each health board area for the purpose of the after-care of cardiac bypass patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are currently expanding the capacity for cardiac operations in Scotland. Over the past two years Aberdeen, Edinburgh and Glasgow royal infirmaries and the Western infirmary in Glasgow have been allocated additional funds to enable them to increase the number of cardiac operations. It is for each health board to determine within these funds how many intensive care beds and staff are required for the increased number of cardiac operations.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list per health board area the total number of cardiac bypass operations carried out in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of cardiac bypass operations performed by health board of residence for the past five years are as follows:

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989

Locate in Scotland

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by region, the number of projects, investment, and new jobs which Locate in Scotland has attracted to Scotland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Lang: An analysis of projects disaggregated by region would, in the form requested, breach the commercial confidence of the companies involved.

The table gives information on total inward investment in Scotland for the years 1987-88 to 1989-90. The planned job and investment figures are based on company forecasts.

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Number of projects	84	55	64
New jobs	6,363	4,846	9,649
Safeguarded jobs	4,856	2,243	2,640
Total jobs	11,219	7,089	12,289
Investment (£ million)	324	437	853

These figures relate only to projects where there was direct involvement by Locate in Scotland or the Industry Department for Scotland. Locate in Scotland is aware of a further four projects which came to Scotland in 1987-88 without such involvement and of a further five in 1988-89.

Southern General Hospital (Spinal Injuries Unit)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has given written confirmation to Greater Glasgow health board in respect of the additional revenue funding required for the national spinal injuries unit at Southern general hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board is aware that the additional revenue costs for the national spinal injuries unit will be centrally funded. The details of the funding arrangements have still to be decided.

Local Enterprise Companies

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a list of all the Scottish local enterprise companies which are in the development phase and those which he expects to enter the development phase, indicating when he expects each of them to become fully operational.

Mr. Lang: All local enterprise companies in Scotland are in the development phase. A full list is given in the table:

Enterprise Ayrshire
Scottish Borders Enterprise Ltd.
Dumfries and Galloway Enterprise Company
Dunbartonshire Enterprise
Fife Enterprise
Forth Valley Enterprise
Glasgow Development Agency
Grampian Enterprise Ltd.
Lanarkshire Enterprise
Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise Ltd.
Renfrewshire Enterprise Company

It is for the local enterprise companies to decide with Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise the date on which they become operational. It is likely that most if not all will become operational by the summer of 1991.

Youth Training

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of males and females currently employed in YTS jobs in (a) Shettleston constituency, (b) Glasgow district, (c) Strathclyde region and (d) Scotland; how many YTS vacancies are currently available for young people; and how many young people are currently unemployed in each of those areas.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 October 1990]: I regret that the information requested about YTS jobs and YTS vacancies is not available. The information about young people under 18 who are claiming benefit and unemployed as at July 1990 (the latest date available) is as follows:

Shettleston Constituency		Glasgow City		Strathclyde Region		Scotland
Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female	Male	Female
2	2	34	41	96	102	186	185

Sequestration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of awards of sequestration during the year ending 31 March 1991 to the latest available date and the total gross payments to trustees from public funds during the current financial year, to the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 October 1990]: In the current financial year up to 30 September 1990 there have been 2,963 awards of sequestration made in the Scottish courts. Gross payments to trustees to that date amounted to £3,438,752.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate his Department has undertaken of the number of sequestrations and total gross costs to public funds through payments to trustees likely to be registered in the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 October 1990]: These will depend in part on the outcome of the evaluation of the Scottish bankruptcy system referred to by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs in his reply of 5 June to the hon. Member, at column 437.

Senile Dementia

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of people in each health board area who have been diagnosed as suffering from senile dementia in (a) 1975, (b) 1980, (c) 1985 and (d) 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 October 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested.

Industrial Redevelopments, Devon

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on new developments or extensions to existing industry sited in north Devon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Good labour relations, a skilled work force and, with the opening of the north Devon link road, more speedy access to the main markets make north Devon an increasingly attractive environment for business to locate and grow. Pall UK and Coutant Electronics are but two good examples of companies which have taken advantage of these conditions. Many more have, taking advantage of the Department's enterprise initiative.

However, much of this work is done by local citizens advice bureaux, as part of their general service. Local bureaux receive most of their funding from local authorities, but my Department funds the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland, which provide support services for local bureaux. Total DTI grant in aid to NACAB and CAS will be more than £11 million in 1990-91.

The Director General of Fair Trading published a report on timesharing in July 1990 which included proposals for extending the Trade Descriptions Act to cover award schemes. These proposals are being considered as part of a current general review of the Act.

Engineering Investment

32. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the level of inward United Kingdom investment in the engineering sector in the last 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest figures readily available to the Invest in Britain Bureau are for the 12 months to June 1990. During this time known inward investments decisions, within manufacturing industry, to locate in the United Kingdom were 279. These include the establishment of new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture. The projects were expected to create over 25,000 jobs and to have safeguarded a further 35,000. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and take no account of subsequent developments.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

33. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has recently received about the implications of the poll tax on the work load of the citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

96. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has recently received about the implications of the poll tax on the work load of the citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

106. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has recently received about the implications of the poll tax on the work load of the citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

Mr. Redwood: The National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux (NACAB) has told my Department that local citizens advice bureaux have had to deal with a number of inquiries arising from the introduction of the community charge just as they used to on rates, although the total number of inquiries to bureaux on all subjects did not change significantly in 1989-90 compared with 1988-89.

The Department of Environment has agreed to give NACAB £36,000 this year to help with the costs of training bureaux workers to deal with these inquiries. The Scottish Office has also given Citizens Advice Scotland £36,000 over the last two years for the same purpose.

A copy has been deposited in the House Library.

101. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to boost manufacturing output.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most important spur to the significant output growth by British manufacturing industry since 1989 has come from the competitive pressures of more open markets. Government continue to promote this objective with policies such as privatisation, deregulation, elimination of restrictive practices and international negotiations to reduce trade barriers through the GATT and in the European Community. In addition, my Department continues to operate a range of schemes to improve business performance under the enterprise initiative.

110. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to protect and promote a high level of research and development in British manufacturing industry.

Industry's own funding of research and development increased by 50 per cent. in real terms between 1983 and 1988. The Department of Trade and Industry provides direct research and development support to industry through a variety of schemes, including collaborative research and development and technology transfer programmes. 40. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to stimulate research and development investment within the small business sector.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A wide range of Government policies creates a favourable climate for innovation and encourage industry to invest in research and development (R and D). In addition, DTI supports collaborative R and D schemes and technology transfer programmes in which small firms are encouraged to participate. Further support is given through SMART, the small firms merit award for research and technology, which is for firms with fewer than 50 employees. Small firms will be further encouraged by three new schemes which are to be launched early next year with the specific aim of boosting R and D and technology transfer in small and medium-sized firms (SMEs). In addition, the consultancy initiatives, which are designed for SMEs, are to include technology as a specific theme.

51. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to assist small and medium-sized firms in enabling them to obtain technological knowledge from experts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Small and medium-sized firms can already obtain technological knowledge from expert consultants through my Department's consultancy initiatives. The Secretary of State recently announced an extension of these initiatives for a final three years. Consultancies under the scheme will in future focus where appropriate on specific themes of which the application of modern technology is one.

The Department of Trade and Industry also provides information on modern technology and current best practice through various technology transfer programmes including those on modern materials, advanced information technology and industrial lasers. The Secretary of State plans to introduce two new programmes to assist small and medium-sized firms. One will help firms to plan the introduction of modern manufacturing systems. Mr. Lilley: I attended an informal meeting of Community Trade Ministers and the Commission in September which discussed this matter. The Commission is proposing a transitional period of continuing restrictions lasting until the late 1990s. The United Kingdom continues to press for early liberalisation. We remain adamant that cars made in the EC by Japanese-owned companies must continue to be allowed unlimited free circulation throughout the Community. I believe this has now been accepted by other member states and the Commission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the latest estimates, the United Kingdom had a deficit of £685 million in the manufactured products of the electronics and information technology sector in the first quarter of 1990. This sector is defined as the principal products of activity headings 3301-2, 3441-4 and 3453-4 of the standard industrial classification. These figures are for hardware only. Legal Advice (Single Market)

62. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to promote access to legal advice which crosses national frontiers to enable United Kingdom firms to take advantage of the opportunities afforded by the single European market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are anxious to ensure that there is continuing progress towards the freedom of provision of legal services in the Community. Member states are obliged by 4 January 1991 to implement directive 89/48/EEC on a general system for the recognition of higher-education diplomas. This will allow lawyers from one member state to be admitted to the corresponding profession in another member state and practise as members of that profession, using the title of the host member state. Entry to the profession in another member state will be subject only to a limited written test or period of supervised practice where necessary to show competence in provisions of the national law of the host state.

We are also anxious that there should be as few restrictions as possible on the provision of legal advice in another member state not as a member of that state's profession but as a member of the lawyer's home state profession.

In the United Kingdom, there is only a small range of activities that is reserved to members of our legal profession: rights of audience in court, the issue of certain court proceedings, probate and conveyancing. Beyond those activities, we do not impose any restrictions on who may give legal advice, and we welcome foreign lawyers or law firms practising under their home state title in the United Kingdom. Not all member states adopt such a liberal approach. My right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and I will continue our efforts to persuade colleagues in other member states that freedom to provide legal advice throughout the Community using home state title should be allowed, and that the provisions of the treaty of Rome on rights of establishment are adhered to.

Net Book Agreement

65. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to review the net book agreement.

Mr. Redwood: I have no such plans. Under the relevant legislation, the review of arrangements such as the net book agreement (NBA) is a matter for the Restrictive Practices Court, on application by the Director General of Fair Trading.

The Director General considered the case for a fresh application in August 1989. He noted that, since 1962, there had been many changes in the book publishing and retailing trades, but the question he had to consider was whether these changes were of such magnitude as to lead the court to a different conclusion on the effects of ending the NBA. He concluded that there was an insufficiently strong basis to justify him in making an application to the court to reopen the case.

British Exporters

66. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to help British exporters.

108. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to help British exporters.

95. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Britain's export performance.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have seen a significant and sustained growth in United Kingdom exports. The value of non-oil exports doubled between 1979-1988. It increased again by 16 per cent. in 1989. In the three months to September, the value of goods exported was 9 per cent. higher than a year ago. This is a remarkable success, achieved in the face of increasingly strong competition, on which British exporters are to be congratulated.

128. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what meetings he has had with representatives of those manufacturers or industries which are significant exporters during recent weeks.

Mr. Redwood: Regulation of investment business is for the most part the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board, which is the designated agency under the Financial Services Act 1986. Other aspects of City activity are regulated under other arrangements, such as the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and the Banking Act 1987. If the hon. Members have complaints about specific matters they should contact the relevant regulatory body.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no such plans at present.

Trade Links (Soviet Union)

73. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to promote increased trade links with the Soviet Union and in particular the three Baltic republics.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department has a very full forward programme of events to promote trade with the Soviet Union, including high-level visits, sectoral working groups and specific support for British companies attending trade fairs, missions and seminars. In addition, the Department handles over 100 inquiries a week from British companies seeking business in the Soviet Union.

Although there are no events currently targeted on specific Republics, the major trade event in 1991 will be a British week in Leningrad, which we hope will promote business with a wide area of the Soviet Union, including the nearby Baltic republics.

125. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the number of firms affected by the withdrawal of contracts from Iraq.

Mr. Sainsbury: We do not have a complete count of United Kingdom firms affected. ECGD is in contact with most of the firms which insured their contracts and will be meeting established claims.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he possesses concerning the export arrangements which Ordnance Technologies Ltd of Reading have had with Iraq since 1987.

80. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals his Department has produced recently to encourage greater waste recycling in industry.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is in regular contact with industry to encourage the development of projects which seek to recycle unavoidable waste. Recycling projects are eligible for consideration under two schemes announced on 2 October, ETIS and DEMOS.

ETIS, the environmental technology innovation scheme, is a joint Department of Trade and Industry/ Department of the Environment scheme designed to encourage environmental innovation and improved environmental standards. DEMOS, the DTI environmental management options scheme, is to promote the spread of best environmental practice among companies. Both these schemes have a particular focus on recycling, including recycling of industrial waste.

83. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on independent studies on the impact of privatisation on managerial effectiveness; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Much has been written about privatisation, and one point at least is clear. Privatisation has freed businesses from bureaucratic constraints, and management can at last use commercial judgment to deliver the goods and services demanded by customers in a competitive market.

Federal Republic of Germany

85. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of goods exported to and imported from the Federal Republic of Germany in the last full year of which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: United Kingdom visible exports to the Federal Republic of Germany in the 12 months ended August 1990 totalled £12.5 billion. Visible imports in the same period were £20.5 billion.

GATT Talks

87. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on current progress in the GATT talks in the multi-fibre arrangement.

136. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the latest negotiations on GATT with particular reference to textiles and clothing and the future of the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The current round of GATT negotiations is due to end in Brussels in the first week in December. The textiles negotiating group is meeting almost continuously in Geneva with a view to producing a draft text of an agreement on the integration into GATT of trade in textiles and clothing. Subjects being discussed include the length of the transitional period between the expiry of MFA IV and full liberalisation, the process by which the various categories of products are to be liberalised, the nature of the transitional safeguard mechanism and the link between the phasing out of the MFA and progress in other parts of the negotiations.

93. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the future of the multi-fibre arrangement.

The textiles negotiating group is meeting almost continuously in Geneva with a view to producing a draft text of an agreement on the integration into GATT of trade in textiles and clothing. Subjects being discussed include the length of the transitional period between the expiry of MFA IV and full liberalisation, the process by which the various categories of products are to be liberalised, the nature of the transitional safeguard mechanism and the link between the phasing out of the MFA and progress in other parts of the negotiations.

Negotiations on how this should be done are due to be completed in Brussels in December.

Unit Trusts

102. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he will be taking to ensure that the British unit trust investment sector will not be put at a competitive disadvantage after 1992 compared to other European countries' industries.

Mr. Redwood: The European directive on UCITS (undertakings for collective investments in transferable securities) came into force on 1 October 1989. The directive provides for cross-border trade in UCITS, including most classes of United Kingdom authorised unit trusts. On 1 October 1990 my Department submitted a report to the Trade and Industry Select Committee on the operation and impact of the UCITS directive. As yet there is little evidence of any cross-border trade, but the report identifies the principal factors which will affect the long-term impact of the directive. The Government will continue, in conjunction with the unit trust industry, to monitor the competitiveness of the United Kingdom unit trust in Europe. Copies of the report have been laid in the Libraries of the House.

Global Financial Market

107. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action international regulators are taking to tackle the challenges of a global financial market.

Mr. Redwood: There are many current instances of international action to tackle the challenges of a global financial market. Examples include existing and proposed European Community ligislation on banking, insider dealing, insurance, investment services and capital requirements; bilaterial agreements on exchange of enforcement information.

The Department of Trade and Industry is joint signatory with SIB of memoranda of understanding with the United States and Japanese authorities; there are agreements between SIB and its counterparts in 37 countries.

There is worldwide recognition that these arrangements need to be developed in order to facilitate cross-border trade in financial services while protecting investors from risk.

International discussion takes place through formal and informal contacts on a bilaterial basis and in multilateral fora, such as IOSCO—the International Organisation for Securities Commissions.

One of the most recent initiatives was the first trilateral meeting of United Kingdom, United States and Japanese regulatory authorities which I attended at Airlie in Virginia on 18 and 19 September. This resulted in the Airlie house declaration which affirmed continuing close co-operation between the authorities in the three major world financial markets. A copy of this is in the Library.

Eastern Europe

113. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what visits he has made to eastern Europe in 1990 to discuss privatisation.

Mr. Lilley: In September, together with a party of British business men, I visited Berlin for talks with the West German Minister for the Economy and German business men. Among other things, we discussed investment in East Germany and in eastern Europe more generally, including opportunities arising from privatisation.

My predecessor visited Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary earlier this year and privatisation was one of the key issues discussed. Over the last year or so other DTI Ministers have led parties of business men to these countries as well as to the USSR, Romania and the GDR, and have addressed the question of privatisation on most occasions.

Small Engineering Companies

117. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from small engineering companies about the business outlook for the sector.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend and I receive a considerable number of representations on a variety of topics relating to the regulation of financial services. We consider very carefully those which relate to the scope or the framework of the regulatory system or to the powers under the Financial Services Act which the Government retain. Those which relate to matters which are the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board or another regulatory authority are passed to the appropriate body.

Wild Birds

119. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to ban the trade in wild birds for the purposes of domestic pets.

Mr. Sainsbury: The import of wild birds is already strictly controlled by conservation legislation. The United Kingdom is party to the convention on international trade in endangered species (CITES) under which trade in certain species is closely monitored while commercial trade in the most endangered species is completely banned. The import of many non-CITES species into the United Kingdom is also controlled under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976.

I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is currently looking at ways of improving and extending the controls on the import of species which are unlikely to survive in captivity.

Single Market (Takeovers)

120. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will implement the Trade and Industry Select Committee's recommendation in respect of the single market on early publication of the European Commission's study on barriers to takeovers in the Community.

Mr. Redwood: The Commission has decided not to publish the report. HMSO has, however, published the report on barriers to takeovers that the Department of Trade and Industry commissioned in 1989. This covers the same issues and arrives at broadly similar conclusions concerning the prevalence and significance of specific barriers.

Insurance Industry

123. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what future steps he will be taking to ensure that the British insurance industry is not put at a competitive disadvantage after 1992.

Mr. Redwood: The United Kingdom supports the Commission's proposals for the single insurance passport. The removal of trade barriers after 1992 will provide new opportunities for the United Kingdom industry, and is good news for the consumer. Our negotiations are designed to ensure fair access for our companies.

Motor Industry

124. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what visits he has made to companies in the motor industry; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I visited Motor Panels in Coventry on 22 October to open a tool shop. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State visited Toyota's Burnaston site and Rearsby Automotive Ltd. on 23 August, as well as Bostrom Ltd. on 2 October.

EC Financial Services Directives

126. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made by his discussions within the Council of Ministers on the need to ensure that the capital adequacy and financial services directives do not unfairly discriminate against the United Kingdom independent intermediary sector.

Mr. Redwood: The investment services directive and its supporting capital adequacy directive are currently under negotiation. The Government recognise the special role of independent financial intermediaries in the United Kingdom financial sector and want them to benefit as far as possible from the opportunities of the single market. However, the Government are equally concerned not to subject such firms to inappropriately high capital requirements. As the negotiations progress, I expect that a balance will have to be struck between the benefits which could flow from the European "single passport" and the burdens which could arise from the terms of the capital adequacy directive. I am keeping progress on the directives under constant review in the light of this consideration.

Republic of Ireland

133. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received recently on trade with the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received one representation about the import of cheese from the Republic of Ireland.

EC Shipbuilding Directive

137. Dr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last discussed with his EC ministerial colleagues the sixth directive on the shipbuilding fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 March last.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

138. Mr. [illegible]: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's estimates of the opportunities for British industry concomitant on joining the ERM.

Mr. Lilley: Membership of the ERM will help to provide greater stability of exchange rates with our main trading partners which will help businesses plan for the future.

Post Office

141. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to meet the chairman of the Post Office to discuss the regulation of, and investment in, the Post Office.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman of the Post Office, Sir Bryan Nicholson, regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest and concern.

Footwear and Textile Industry

143. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to safeguard the footwear and textile industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The future of the United Kingdom companies in the footwear and textile sectors depends essentially on their own efforts to compete effectively in the United Kingdom and world markets. My Department consults these industries closely in its efforts to create conditions for fair and open trade. These industries have also benefited from DTI schemes which support regional development and collaborative research and development:

Export Credits Guarantee Department

145. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the future of the ECGD.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies of 19 July 1990, Official Report, column 677 and of 26 July 1990, Official Report, columns 409-10.

Exports (Middle East)

146. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the effect of the Gulf crisis on British exports to the middle east.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is too early to say with certainty how the Gulf crisis will affect United Kingdom trade over the next few months with the middle east region as a whole.

Confederation of British Industry

148. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has met the Confederation of British Industry in order to discuss appropriate recognition for those involved in industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No, but it is open to any individual or organisation to put forward suggestions for such recognition.

Science Parks

149. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of science parks attached to universities and polytechnics today and in 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Only two universities, Cambridge and Heriot-Watt, had science parks in 1979. According to the definition used by the United Kingdom Science Parks Association, there are now 39 science parks in the United Kingdom. Of these, 33 are linked with universities or university colleges, and the others are linked to polytechnics, higher educational institutions, and centres of expertise.

Technology and Development Group

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will order the closure of the London office of the Technology and Development Group in light of the Iraqi Government's use of it for arms purchases.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have no statutory power to order the closure of a company or organisation. However, all companies established in the United Kingdom are required to comply with United Kingdom legislation, including the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 relating to the export of military goods and the orders giving effect to United Nations Security Council resolution 661.

Company Investigations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investigations are being carried out by his Department, or by regulatory authorities set up under the Financial Services Act, into the affairs of the Gans Group Ltd. and Research and Development Investments of Enfield.

Mr. Redwood: There is no trace of either named business. It may be, however, that the question refers to the Genn Group Ltd. and Research Development & Investments (Building) Ltd.

The Genn Group Ltd. went into creditors voluntary liquidation on 7 September 1989. The Secretary of State is not investigating the affairs of that company nor is he aware of any similar inquiry by a regulatory body set up under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Research Development and Investments (Building) Ltd. was wound up by the High Court on 15 November 1989 on the petition of the Secretary of State. Further inquiries into its affairs are being undertaken by the Crown prosecution service.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will consider holding an inquiry into the activities of Eurocopy Ltd;

(2) if he will consider holding a further inquiry into the activities of Purdie and Kirkpatrick Ltd.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: I am prepared to consider any information the honourable Member may provide which might warrant an inquiry under the Companies Act into either company.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to require companies to inform their shareholders of their record on environmental pollution.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have imposed no requirements on companies to inform their shareholders of these matters. Companies are themselves best placed to decide, in the light of their individual circumstances, whether such information is likely to be of interest to their members. Interested members may in any case put questions on this subject at the annual general meeting.

Privatisation Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department was consulted on the appointment of advisers on privatisation.

Mr. Redwood: The appointment of advisers is handled on a competitive basis, and is a matter for the Department concerned.

Share Certificates

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking in line with the undertaking given by his predecessor in column 681 of Standing Committee D of 29 June 1989 to ensure that small shareholders will continue to be able to insist on having share certificates in companies when the TAURUS proposals are fully implemented; whether he is receiving acceptable assurances and co-operation from the stock exchange to that end; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Regulations which are being draften now, and which I will ask this House to affirm next year, will set out the steps any company must take if it wishes to join TAURUS. The regulations the Government will bring forward will not oblige companies to join, and will provide that a company may not do so unless its members have passed a resolution agreeing to such entry.

The consultative paper "Electronic recording and transfer of shares", published by my Department in July, sought comments on whether companies should be required to permit inactive shareholders the option of continuing with a certified holding, at least for an initial period even when the company had voted to join TAURUS. Some respondents considered that companies should have the option of retaining a certificated portion of their register, but only for shareholders who never transferred shares through the market. The clear majority of respondents argued for all shares of any company joining TAURUS to be uncertificated for the purposes of legal transfer and recording. Some companies may decide to join TAURUS but to issue a paper confirmation of holding to all those using the company's own account likely to be used by most small independent shareholders. This may be sufficient. I am considering the position of small shareholders in the light of all representations made about the full package of proposals for TAURUS, taking particular account of the need to safeguard the interests of small investors alongside the wish of the stock exchange to move rapidly to the TAURUS system to improve its international competitiveness.

Directors (Disqualification)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many directors were disqualified under companies and financial services legislation in each year since 1980; and in how many cases his Department's inspectors' reports were a material factor in the disqualification.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Disqualification order made are noted in the report on companies, pursuant to section 729 of the Companies Act 1975, published each year, copies of which are in the Library. Section 8 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 (disqualification after investigation of company) came into force on 29 December 1986 and enables applications to be made on the basis of reports made on or after 28 April 1986. No orders have yet been made under this section, but as the table shows many have been made under other sections.

Between 1980 and 1986 six orders were made under section 188 of the Companies Act 1988—power to restrain fraudulent persons from managing companies—and section 28 of the Companies Act 1976—disqualification for persistent default in delivering documents to registrar—involving companies where inspectors had been appointed.

Harris Queensway Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investigations his Department has carried out into Harris Queensway Ltd.

Mr. Redwood (holding answer 29 October 1990): I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Lowndes Queensway plc because that company came into existence in 1988 as a result of a merger of Harris Queensway plc and Lowndes Ventures plc.

I am prepared to consider any information the hon. Member may provide which might warrant an inquiry.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has made to the European Economic Community competition commissioner about his investigation of United Kingdom accountancy firms; and if he will publish those representations.

Mr Redwood (holding answer 30 October 1990): My Department has been in contact with the consultants carrying out the study for the European Commission.

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost of preparing inspectors' reports under the Companies Acts since May 1979 distinguishing between reports that were published, and those that were not.

Mr. Redwood (holding answer 30 October 1990): I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 18 July, Official Report, cols 647-48. The available information for the period June to December 1979 is given in the table:

	June to December 1979
Completed Reports	8
Published Final Reports	[1] [2]4
Published Interim Reports	—
Unpublished Final Reports	[1]2
Unpublished Interim Reports	[3]2

[1] The cost of one report was £106,441. The costs of the five others are not now readily available.

[2] Reports were not necessarily published in the same year they were completed.

[3] Costs of investigations to interim report stage are not readily available.

Companies House

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the surplus of income over expenditure achieved by the Companies House agency in the financial year 1989-90; and whether that surplus is net of the expenditure on the companies investigation branch of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1990]: For 1989-90 Companies House executive agency achieved a gross surplus of income over expenditure of £11·1 million. This gross operating surplus funds other costs of running the system of regulating companies and developing law, including the companies investigation branch of the DTI.

Company Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies, distinguishing between financial services companies and other companies, have failed to file annual accounts (a) since 1986, (b) since 1987 and (c) since 1988.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1990]: It is not possible to distinguish between financial services companies and other types. The following figures relate to all companies currently registered in England and Wales.

Latest accounts received for 1986 = 14,227
Latest accounts received for 1987 = 30,707
Latest accounts received for 1988 = 154,193.

Consultants (Cost)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions in the last two years his Department has consulted the accountancy firm Stoy Hayward; about what issues; and at what cost.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: This information is not held centrally by my Department.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what matters he has sought the advice of Coopers and Lybrand in the last two years, and at what cost.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: This information is not held centrally by my Department.

Polly Peck Limited

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) on what date his Department became aware that the latest accounts of Polly Peck Limited show current liabilities of £800,000,000;

(2) on what date his Department became aware that brand names and goodwill appeared as substantial assets in the latest accounts of Polly Peck Limited.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: I assume the hon. Member is referring to Polly Peck International plc, which is the listed company. The latest accounts received by the Department are those for the year ending 31 December 1989. These were filed at Companies house on 7 August 1990 and made available to searchers on 13 August. The subsequent interim statement is not required to be filed. The level of borrowings in any company and their composition are matters for the company, its shareholders and bankers, not for Government. If a company is no longer able to pay its bills then there are provisions for creditors under the insolvency legislation.

DEFENCE

Over-the-horizon Radar, Dyfed

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether agreement has been reached over funding by the United States of America of the possible over-the-horizon radar installation being considered for Brawdy in Dyfed.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. The memorandum of understanding signed by the United Kingdom and United States Governments on 20 April 1990 makes general provision for the equitable contribution, subject to the availability of appropriated funds, of both Governments to the costs of a two-year trial of an over-the-horizon radar in the United Kingdom; and specifically for the United States Government to provide, among other things, a production OTHR system for the trial.

Salmon Fishing

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any salmon netting stations in Northumberland are still owned by Greenwich Hospital Estates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

105. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the proceeds of the sale of a salmon netting station at Spittal by Greenwich Hospital Estates to the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust; and whether the sale included any conditions or covenants affecting its future operation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Greenwich hospital sold the salmon netting station at Spittal, otherwise known as Hudshead fishery, to the River Tweed commissioners (not the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust) in August 1988 for £3,000. The sale of the fishery did not include any conditions or covenants affecting its future operation.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many fast jet low-level sorties were flown by British military aircraft over the Federal Republic of Germany in 1989; and how many movements by such aircraft through the West German 250 ft areas were recorded;

(2) how many low-level sorties were flown by British military fast jet aircraft over the Federal Republic of Germany between 1 January and 16 September inclusive; and how many movements by such aircraft through the West German 250 ft areas were recorded.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This information is not available in the precise form requested but Royal Air Force Germany carried out some 14,000 fixed-wing low-level sorties over the Federal Republic of Germany in 1989 and some 9,000 sorties between 1 January and 16 September 1990. The numbers of recorded entries into the 250 ft low-flying areas in the Federal Republic of Germany over the same periods were 21,100 and 15,600 respectively. Individual sorties may incorporate several entries into the flying areas.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the figures for low-flying sorties by aircraft type, provided in his reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 26 July, Official Report, columns 527-28, include sorties by F-4, Jaguar and Tornado aircraft operated by foreign air forces.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if allied aircraft participating in unit exchange visits to the United Kingdom are permitted to fly over the United Kingdom at 250 ft.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: NATO squadrons carrying out Headquarters Allied Air Forces Central Europe approved exchange visits to the United Kingdom are normally permitted to use the United Kingdom low-flying system subject to appropriate regulations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what definition is used for centre, expressed as a radius in nautical miles, in the instructions to pilots concerning overflight of the centres of major conurbations and built-up areas in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As the Government's response to the Defence Committee's report on low flying made clear, (HC659, page v) the instructions are not expressed in terms of any specific radius.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the regulatory measures introduced for foreign aircraft flying at low level in the United Kingdom since 17 September.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Strict controls have always applied to flying in the United Kingdom low flying system by any foreign aircraft based outside the United Kingdom and full account is taken of any restrictions applied in the aircraft's country of origin. This remains the case.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1 January low flying over the United Kingdom has been permitted on Saturdays and Sundays; and how many sorties were booked on those occasions.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost and effort.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the differences between the basis of recording low flying movements in the borders tactical training area (a) before and (b) after July 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave to the hon. Member on 20 July 1989, at column 316.

Foreign Military Aircraft

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department holds copies of the reports of inquiries into accidents to foreign military aircraft which have occurred in the United Kingdom;

(2) what is his policy on the recording of details of accidents to foreign military aircraft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the Government's formal response to the House of Commons Defence Committee's fifth report, Session 1989-90, on low flying. The response was published on 30 October as House of Commons Paper 659.

Under the arrangements for obtaining information on foreign military aircraft accidents in the United Kingdom, the Ministry of Defence holds either copies of the reports of inquiries, or information on the accidents provided in reply to MOD requests.

Trident

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will itemise the overspend incurred in the Trident nuclear weapons programme over the past two years.

Mr. Alan Clark: There has been no overspend. Indeed, expenditure over the past two financial years (1988-89 and 1989-90) was almost £10 million below estimate.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements have been determined for the access offered to British journalists to report events in the Gulf (a) at present and (b) in the event of an escalation of violence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Satisfactory arrangements have been established which ensure that British journalists have access to United Kingdom forces in the Gulf. We are developing appropriate contingency plans with Saudi Arabia and our other allies in the multinational force.

Nuclear Test Explosions

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear test explosions have been conducted at the Nevada test site by the United Kingdom since 1979 for the purposes of improving the safety in storage and transport of United Kingdom nuclear warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 29 October at column 416.

Military Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of any deployments of mobile threat emitter equipment outside the Spadeadam range.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Mobile threat emitter equipment is occasionally deployed to various parts of the country each year in support of RAF-sponsored exercises. The deployments for 1990 are representative of a typical annual deployment programme and were as follows:

Date
23 to 31 March	Otterburn Range
15 to 19 May	Salisbury Plain
13 to 19 July	Mid Wales
17 to 21 July	East Lothian
30 July to 4 August	Otterburn Range

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the fast jet low-flying activity scheduled to take place on Saturday 21 and Sunday 22 October in northern England and south-east Scotland; what types of aircraft and which units were involved; how many sorties took place on each day; and if the Spadeadam range was specially activated for the exercise.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Low flying was exceptionally authorised on the weekend of 20-21 October for Jaguar aircrew conducting training connected with our current commitment in the Gulf. However, in the event bad weather forced all the sorties to be flown at medium level, and no use was made of Spadeadam range.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the results of the military aircraft noise survey held at RAF West Freugh earlier this year.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 13 June 1990 at column 241.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the types of stores or materials which military aircraft are permitted to drop within the Spadeadam range area.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Within the Spadeadam range area aircraft are permitted to drop small amounts of chaff. In addition, the range is cleared, up to a maximum of 28 days per year, to allow the dropping of practice bombs on Wiley Sike (an air weapons range within the Spadeadam range).

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas of the United Kingdom where military aircraft are permitted to release infra-red decoy flares.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Military aircraft are not normally permitted to release infra-red decoys over the land anywhere in the United Kingdom, but may do so over the sea when clear of shipping or other hazards.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of the recent changes made to the southern boundary of the Spadeadam area of intense aerial activity; and whether concomitant changes have been made to the southern boundary of low flying area 13.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom low flying system is continuously monitored and changes are made where necessary to spread low-flying more evenly and enhance flight safety while at the same time reducing, where possible, disturbance to those on the ground. The southern boundaries of low-flying area 13 and the Spadeadam area of intense air activity remain coincident.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas of the United Kingdom where military aircraft are permitted to dispense chaff.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The dispensing of chaff in the United Kingdom by military aircraft is strictly controlled and is generally carried out over the sea. Over land military aircraft are permitted to dispense small quantities of chaff when operating at the electronic warfare training range at Spadeadam.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce a limit on the number of military aircraft permitted to operate in low flying area 16 at any one time.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom low-flying system is kept under constant review but there are no such plans at present.

Borders Tactical Training Area

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Borders tactical training area first came into use.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Borders tactical training area was formally incorporated in the United Kingdom low-flying system in 1984.

Military Hospitals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the consequences for military hospitals of the preparations for the outbreak of hostilities in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The medical support to the Gulf has been drawn in part from all the service hospitals in the United Kingdom. The Cambridge military hospital at Aldershot, together with the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich and the Princess Mary's RAF hospital at Halton, are not accepting new NHS patients other than for maternity and paediatrics and oncology at Halton. The remaining five hospitals at Catterick, Wroughton, Ely, Haslar and Plymouth are still accepting NHS patients, but on a reduced scale. Discussions have been held between officials of the Ministry of Defence and Department of Health on how alternative provision can best be made for the NHS patients affected by these changes.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in considering the "Options For Change" policy which was announced on 25 July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 30 October at column 501.

Atlantic Conveyor

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation was paid for the loss of the Atlantic Conveyor in the Falklands war.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

A payment of £9·3 million in respect of the loss of the Atlantic Conveyor was made from the marine and aviation insurance (war risks) fund under the Government's war risks insurance arrangements.

EMPLOYMENT

Sheltered Placement Schemes

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities about the failure to expand the number of sheltered placements schemes; what assurances the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has sought about future policy; and what replies he has sent.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a copy of a letter from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities on this issue, and a reply will be sent shortly. A further letter has been received by the Employment Service's assistant resettlement adviser for Scotland. The convention has sought the assistance of the Department in ensuring that the sheltered placement scheme expands wherever desirable in the interests of the employment of people with disabilities. The Government remain committed to the scheme.

Departmental Reorganisation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what organisations and sections within his Department presently being housed in London are being considered for dispersal to provincial areas.

Mr. Jackson: On 2 August 1989 my predecessor announced that 1,100 posts from my Department's headquarters, the Training Agency's head office and the Employment Service head office would be moved to Runcorn—800—and Sheffield—300.

Relocation is kept under constant review and, as a result, I have decided that a further 90 posts from the Employment Service will also be relocated to Sheffield.

Employers (Prosecutions)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which year an employer was last prosecuted for (a) illegal underpayment of wages, (b) failure to produce records and (c) producing false records.

Mr. Forth: Employers have been prosecuted on one or more of these charges during the course of 1990.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of civil proceedings taken by the wages inspectorate in Scotland in each year from 1979 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Forth: Two civil proceeding cases were taken by the wages inspectorate in Scotland between 1979 and 1989; both were in 1984.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of cases in Scotland passed by the wages inspectorate to the procurator fiscal for consideration or prosecution in each year from 1985 to 1989; and if he will indicate for the cases where there was decision not to prosecute, the reasons for these decisions.

Mr. Forth: No cases were passed to the procurator fiscal during the period specified.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the prosecution of the five companies forming Translink Joint Venture concerning the death of Keith Lynch on 10 January during construction of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Forth: On 12 October 1990 the Health and Safety Executive announced its decision to prosecute Translink Joint Venture for an alleged breach of Section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 following the investigation into the circumstances which led to the death of Keith Lynch on 10 January. The case is due to be heard before Dover and East Kent magistrates court on 12 December 1990.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the prosecutions against the five companies forming Translink Joint Venture, the British half of the Anglo-French consortium Transmanche-Link, building the channel tunnel; and in each case itemise the outcome of each prosecution and Government action taken as a result of the outcome.

Mr. Forth: The Health and Safety Executive has successfully prosecuted the five constituent companies of Translink Joint Venture (TJV) on three occasions:

(i) on 26 July 1988 at Canterbury Crown court total fines of £8,750 and costs of approximately £7,500 were imposed for breaches of sections 2 and 3 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974—HSW—and the Construction (General Provisions) Regulations 1961. This followed HSE's investigation into an incident on 2 December 1987 when four eight-ton railway wagons ran 300m down an adit into the tunnel workings;

(ii) on 16 November 1988, Dover magistrates court imposed fines totalling £20,000 and costs of £500 for breaches of sections 2 and 3 of the HSW Act arising out of HSE's investigation into an incident underground on 5 April 1988 when a cylinder of liquefied petroleum gas was hit and punctured by a train;

(iii) on 26 March 1990 at Maidstone Crown court fines totalling £50,000 and costs of nearly £6,000 were imposed for a breach of section 2 of the HSW Act following HSE's investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death of David Symes on 6 February 1990.

The HSE's prosecution of TJV for alleged breaches of section 2 of the HSW Act following the investigation into the death of Gary Woodward on 23 October 1989, the third site fatality, is before the courts. The HSE is also prosecuting Robbins-Markham joint venture companies—suppliers of the tunnel boring machine—for an alleged breach of section 3 of the HSW Act. On 24 October 1990 Dover magistrates committed these cases to Maidstone Crown court.

On 12 October the HSE announced its decision to prosecute TJV for an alleged breach of section 2 of the HSW Act following the investigation into the death of Keith Lynch, the fourth site fatality, on 10 January 1990. The case is due to be heard before Dover and East Kent magistrates court on 12 December 1990.

It is the duty of the Health and Safety Executive to make arrangements to enforce the 1974 Act. When investigating accidents or other incidents, HSE inspectors will ensure that the firms concerned take prompt remedial action to prevent any recurrence. Such action is not linked to the outcome of a particular prosecution.

Temporary Work Sites

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the European Community directive on temporary and mobile work sites.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the explanatory memorandum on the directive which was submitted to the House by the Department on 12 October 1990. Copies of the memorandum are available from the Vote Office.

Beryllium

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will conduct an evaluation of the safety practices currently in place for the transport, storage and fabrication of the metal beryllium.

Mr. Forth: No. A number of regulations have been made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 which specify the precautions necessary during the transport, storage and fabrication of hazardous substances such as beryllium. Additionally, occupational exposure to beryllium is currently under review by the Health and Safety Commission's advisory committee on toxic substances.

Profile Training, Bradford

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what financial monitoring has been carried out by the training agency of Profile Training, Bradford; whether all the sub-contractors to Profile Training have been paid; and how much has been paid by the training agency to Profile Training for 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Financial monitoring was carried out in accordance with the Training Agency's system of financial appraisal and monitoring which is designed to protect public funds and reduce the risk of fraud. Details of financial arrangements between the Training Agency and training managers and between training managers and their sub-contractors are commercial and are treated in confidence.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies have been notified in the Bradford travel-to-work area during 1990 to the most recent practicable date in textiles, engineering, machine tools, steel fabrication and welding, textile engineering, building, electrical engineering and transport.

Mr. Forth: Figures on notification of redundancies are not held for areas smaller than economic regions.

Astra Training Services Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the value of the freehold sites transferred to Astra Training Services Ltd.; how many employees have been made redundant from all sites; what provision has been made by his Department for redundant persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government appointed King and Co. to value the Skills Training Agency estate prior to the sale of STA to the private sector. The acquisition of Astra of 28 freehold sites formed part of their overall sale package which involved a payment from the Government to Astra of some £10·7 million.

As the hon. Member was informed on 21 May 1990, staffing levels in parts of STA which have been sold to the private sector are a matter for the new purchasers. Most of these purchasers have made it clear that they will need to restructure the businesses to secure commercial viability.

Staff in the parts of STA which were not included in sale packages have been redeployed as far as possible but some redundancies were inevitable. Sixty five staff in instructional officer grades in the unsold sites of STA have accepted voluntary redundancy and 41 staff in industrial and support grades in these unsold units have been made redundant.

My Department has reached agreement with trade unions that preferential consideration for reinstatement in the Employment Department group will be given to certain staff employed in STA immediately before sale if they are made redundant in the private sector within three years of sale.

Community Programme

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many community programme projects have been adapted to employment training initiatives; and what moneys are spent in providing the community with those benefits such as child care which are not directly part of employment training programmes but which were formerly an aspect of the community programmes.

Mr. Jackson: All community programme providers were encouraged to enter employment training. Information is not available on the number of specific projects which carried over from the community programme to employment training, and on moneys spent on community services like child care, which were previously funded under the community programme.

Long-term Unemployment

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any further plans to develop his Department's services for the long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Over the last few months I have been reviewing the wide range of help my Department offers through training and employment service to long-term unemployed people. The number of those unemployed for over six months has fallen by 60 per cent. since April 1986. Our measures have played an important part in this very substantial fall, but there is always scope for further refinement, better targeting and the introduction of new approaches.

Already this year I have announced the introduction of new "back to work" plans for each unemployed person; the establishment of a unified advisory service within the Employment Service to enhance the effectiveness of the support it can provide; extra intensive counselling and advice for those who have been unemployed for two years or more; more systematic follow-up of those who do not take up places on our programmes even though they have agreed to do so; our intention to require those who have been out of work for two years or more and persistently refuse help in finding work to attend a restart course designed to build confidence and motivation by identifying capabilities and strengths.

I am also asking the chief executive of the Employment Service to develop further a number of its existing initiatives for the long-term unemployed, to increase the number of people helped by job clubs, in particular specialist job clubs for people with particular difficulties; extend the job interview guarantee programme which offers the long-term unemployed a range of help in competing better in the labour market and which has been successfully piloted in a number of inner city areas over the last year; develop the work being done to provide support for one-off projects to help disadvantaged groups back to work.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Seaside Rock

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the food safety of seaside rock.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of any issues of food safety. But if there are any questions raised on the safety of seaside rock my scientists in the food safety directorate would be happy to investigate them.

Bees

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that health requirements on the importation of bees are sufficient to prevent the introduction of varroa to this country.

Mr. Maclean: Our aim is to keep this country free of varroasis. The Importation of Bees Order 1980 prohibits imports of honey bees except under licence from countries of high bee health status which are free from varroasis.

France (Livestock Exports)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the recent incidents in France relating to the import of British livestock; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Curry: My colleagues and I have made it absolutely clear to the French Government and in the Council of Agriculture Ministers that we totally condemn the incidents in France involving attacks on imported livestock and carcases. As a result of our sustained pressure, the French authorities expressed their determination to maintain law and order and to take action against those concerned in the incidents. They have also said that they will compensate for financial losses arising as a direct result of the incidents. We remain determined to ensure the safety and free passage of animals, drivers and goods. We shall continue to monitor the situation and will not hesitate to raise the matter again with the French authorities if further incidents threaten our trade.

Food Imports

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make representations to the Commission of the European Community about the dumping of pork by Germany on to the United Kingdom market.

Mr. Curry: Despite persistent rumours to the contrary, imports of pigmeat from Germany on to the United Kingdom market have remained at similar levels to last year. Stocks of pigmeat in ex-German Democratic Republic territories are being exported to eastern Europe.

Green Pound

Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement showing the extent of progress so far achieved in eliminating the green pound.

Mr. Curry: The green pound devaluations agreed at the price fixing have reduced our monetary gaps considerably. On the basis of the position at the time of the price fixing, the changes to MCAs would have been, for cereals, a reduction from 19·7 per cent. to 8 per cent., for milk from 18·8 per cent. to 11·1 per cent. and for beef from 15 per cent. to 5·8 per cent. In fact, by 29 October, these MCAs had been reduced to 3·8 per cent. for milk and 1 per cent. for cereals and had been removed altogether for beef.

We remain committed to the elimination of all MCAs and monetary gaps by the end of 1992 at the latest. Joining the exchange rate mechanism is a further step towards this goal.

Salmon

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to lay the report on his review of salmon net fishing before the House.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which was given to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 15 October, Official Report, column 765.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is available to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland about the presence of dichlorvos in salmon.

Mr. Curry: A survey was carried out by this Department between 1987 and 1989. Ninety-two salmon samples were obtained from farms, processors and markets. No residues of dichlorvos were detected.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to respond to the Select Committee on agriculture's report on BSE.

Mr. Maclean: Shortly.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the absence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy from the cattle populations of other European Community countries.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in respect of which European Community countries his Department has evidence of the existence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: Since 1 April this year, member states have been required under European community law to notify the Commission of any cases of BSE in their territory. To date the disease has been reported only in the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland.

Mink Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Ministry carries out any tests on farmed mink to determine whether they are infected with transmissible mink encephalopathy or any other encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: The Ministry's veterinary investigation service can provide histopathological diagnosis on farmed mink if requested to do so. Transmissible mink encephalopathy has not been recorded in the United Kingdom.

Bird Quarantine

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his meeting with the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds to discuss its response to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food report, "Bird Mortality Statistics for Quarantine Returns".

Mr. Maclean: I understand that officials in the Department had a constructive meeting with a representative from the RSPB on 20 September, and that he was satisfied with the measures being taken and proposed by the Ministry in connection with welfare during transport and conditions at quarantine premises. The Ministry agreed to consider suggestions on improving the content and presentation of the mortality statistics.

Straw and Stubble

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what consultations he has had with the Health and Safety Executive, local authorities and the emergency services in respect of introducing legislation governing the height, size and distance from living premises for the storing and stacking of straw and stubble after the straw and stubble burning legislation comes into effect in 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what legislation is to be enacted by 1992 governing the height, size and distance from the living premises for straw and haystacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The regulations which my right hon. Friend the Minister proposes to introduce following the enactment of the Environmental Protection Bill will prohibit the burning of crop residues, subject to limited exemptions, and will specify the conditions under which any exempted burning may be carried out. We will be consulting widely on the proposed regulations.

The safety aspects of stacking and storing of straw and hay are matters for the Health and Safety Executive and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Intervention Stocks

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 25 October, Official Report, Column 312, if he will give the latest estimates for the amounts of (a) skimmed milk powder, (b) butter, (c) beef and (d) cereals in (i) public and (ii) private intervention in (1) the United Kingdom and (2) the European Community beyond those currently deposited in the Library.

Mr. Gummer: Estimates of United Kingdom and EC public private intervention stocks will be deposited in the Library of the House next week.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had in the Council of Ministers concerning the draft directive on the irradiation of foodstuffs; and what is his position on the proposal to make the directive applicable to a narrow range of foodstuffs.

Mr. Maclean: The Internal Market Council has discussed this draft on two occasions. These meetings have confirmed that a majority of member states wish discussions to continue with a view to an agreed directive being introduced.

In publishing draft regulations on 6 August the Government have proposed limitation of the use of food irradiation to those products for which the process has been confirmed as acceptable from a public health standpoint by the EC scientific committee for food.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Prosecution Costs

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General by how much the total costs of prosecutions in the United Kingdom have risen in the last five years.

The Attorney-General: The total costs of prosecutions in England and Wales prior to the creation of the Crown prosecution service are not readily available. The Crown prosecution service became fully operational on 1 October 1986. The total running costs of the service between the financial years 1987-88, the first full year of its operation, and 1989-90 increased by £50·3 million. The voted expenditure for the current financial year is £25 million more than the total expenditure for the financial year 1989-90. The total expenditure figures for the Crown prosecution service, excluding receipts from costs awarded to the service, are:

1986-87	74,153,000
1987-88	133,840,000
1988-89	156,882,000
1989-90	184,141,000

The voted expenditure for the current financial year is £209,157,000.

Dyslexia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers in Northern Ireland have had specialist training to enable them to assist in developing the full potential of children suffering from dyslexia.

Mr. Needham: Dyslexia can describe a variety of specific learning difficulties experienced by children. All courses of initial teacher training include an element designed to enable students to develop the capacity to identify and deal with pupils with learning difficulties.

Northern Ireland Centre, Brussels

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Northern Ireland district councils, health and social services boards and education and library boards are empowered to make financial contributions towards the cost of a Northern Ireland centre in Brussels.

Mr. Cope: District councils have discretionary powers under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 to incur expenditure or to contribute towards the expenses of any voluntary body or association which carries on activities which are in the interests of the council, the council area or the inhabitants of the area.

Neither health and social services boards nor education and library boards are empowered to make financial contributions towards the cost of a Northern Ireland centre in Brussels.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the future delivery of water and sewerage services.

Mr. Brooke: I propose to transfer the water and sewerage functions of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland to a Government-owned company, in line with the Government's policy of applying private sector disciplines wherever possible. The target date for the transfer is 1 October 1992.

The Government are committed to improving the quality of drinking water in line with EC standards and to protecting the environment. They believe the transfer of the water service to a commercially orientated water company will enable these aims to be met in the most cost-effective way. This will safeguard the interests of ratepayers and metered water consumers. The separation of water and sewerage services from DOE will also facilitate the establishment of effective regulatory regimes, with benefits for the whole community.

A major programme of work lies ahead to achieve an orderly transition from the present arrangements to the new ones. The effective and efficient delivery of water and sewerage services depends on the skills and commitment of the staff of the water service and the Government intend to discuss with the trade unions the basis on which staff will transfer from the Northern Ireland civil service to the new company.

Parliamentary approval to funding for the establishment of the company will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the DOE, vote 3—water and sewerage. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £50,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Newtownbreda

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland within the parameters of which area plan planning applications for private residential developments in the vicinity of the village of Newtownbreda are considered.

Mr. Needham: The Belfast urban area plan 2001.

School Employees

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the remit of the Fair Employment Commission extends to employees of integrated schools and of the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools.

Mr. Needham: A teacher in a primary or a secondary school is exempt from the operations of the Fair Employment (NI) Acts 1976 and 1989. They apply however to the employees of educational bodies such as integrated schools and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools unless they are exempt under section 37 of the 1976 Act, because the essential nature of their jobs requies a particular religious belief or political opinion.

Castlereagh Area Plan

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for the preparation of an area plan for the borough of Castlereagh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The main urban parts of Castlereagh borough council area are covered by the Belfast urban area plan 2001—BUAP—and the recently adopted Carryduff local plan covers a further portion of the council area. Throughout the remaining rural parts of the area the BUAP green belt policy applies.

Work on the preparation of an area plan for the whole of the Castlereagh district is expected to commence in 1993 following a reassessment of the development lands proposed in the BUAP and the expiry of the Carryduff local plan.

Local Government Finance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) domestic and (b) other ratepayers in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years and the current year in each council area in Northern Ireland received a rate rebate of (1) 20 per cent. to 29 per cent., (2) 30 per cent. to 39 per cent., (3) 40 per cent. to 49 per cent., (4) 50 per cent. to 59 per cent., (5) 60 per cent. to 69 per cent., (6) 70 per cent. to 79 per cent., (7) 80 per cent. to 89 per cent. and (8) 90 per cent. or over of their rates; and what percentage of the total ratepayers each such cohort of ratepayers represented.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 October 1990]: Housing benefit is granted only to domestic ratepayers and the schedule shows the total number of ratepayers by district council area who were in receipt of benefit for the last five years and the current year—column A—and the percentage of domestic ratepayers that this represents—column B. Figures relating to the percentage bands requested are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 November.

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 1 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I attended the Prorogation of Parliament. Later today I shall preside at a meeting of the Cabinet and have meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

Receptions, Downing Street

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the estimated total cost of the reception held at Downing street on 29 October; how many of these "getting to know you" receptions have been held in the past year; and how many are proposed for the next 12 months.

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost of the reception is £1,700. During the past year one similar reception was held and one other is planned within the next 12 months.

European Council (Rome)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report the titles and origins of all papers placed before the European Council at its meeting in Rome on 27 October and place copies of each in the Library.

The Prime Minister: The conclusions of the European Council have been placed in the Library of the House in the usual way. Published documents submitted to the European Council fall within the terms of reference of the Select Committee on European Legislation and are deposited.

Nuclear Test Ban

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any communications this year from Parliamentarians Global Action, based in New York, on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: I was invited to meet a delegation from Parliamentarians Global Action in November. I am unable to do so, and the delegation will instead be received by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave).

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to address the amendment conference of the 1963 partial nuclear test ban treaty in New York in January 1991; and what information she has on plans by any other Head of Government or state to address the conference.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to address the partial test ban treaty amendment conference. I am not aware that any other Head of Government or state plans to do so.

Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are in hand for interdepartmental consultations on the appointment of accountancy firms to advise on privatisation.

The Prime Minister: It is for the sponsoring Departments of each privatisation to appoint advisers, which is done on a competitive basis. Her Majesty's Treasury is the co-ordinating Department for privatisations and, as such, provides advice to sponsoring Departments as required.

European Commission

Q24. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the EEC Commission.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit the European Commission at present. I meet European Commissioners during the regular meetings of the European Council and, at times, in London.

German Fishing

Q224. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if, when last she met Chancellor Kohl, and other EC Heads of Government, they discussed the increase in the size of the German fishing fleet, resulting from German unification and the need to persuade German fishermen to move into other areas of the German economy and labour market.

The Prime Minister: The special European Council in Rome on 27 and 28 October did not discuss the specific question of German fishing fleets. But the German authorities have given repeated assurances to the Council of Ministers that they will not seek any adjustments which would affect existing access to Community waters under the common fisheries policy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Written Questions

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council what has been the total number of written questions tabled in the 1989-90 Session; what estimate he has for the cost of replying to them; and what were the comparable figures in the previous Session.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The total number of written questions tabled in Sessions 1988-89 and 1989-90 are 39,540 and 41,371 respectively. Estimates of the average costs of preparing answers and of printing questions and answers are not prepared on a regular basis; the latest figures available are £53 and £38 respectively. These would indicate that the total cost of replying to written questions in the current Session is in the order of £3·7 million.

Telephone Facilities

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his oral answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 18, if he will make a further statement on consideration by the Services Committee of the provision of free official telephone communication facilities for hon. Members to the institutions of the European Community in Brussels and elsewhere; and when he expects the Services Committee study to be concluded with appropriate recommendations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Services Committee is close to reaching conclusions on the provision of free telephone and postal communications with the main European Community institutions. Early in the new Session decisions are expected on these and other aspects of links with the European Community.

I shall arrange for the House to be informed of the Committee's conclusions.

Ministerial Statements

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many ministerial statements were made in the House during the current and each of the previous five Sessions; and if he will analyse them by Department.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The information requested is as shown in the table.

Broadcasting

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many offices in the Palace of Westminster and its outbuildings currently receive a clean feed of proceedings in the House; and who occupies them.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 27 June at columns 232-33, the following offices or rooms within the House and its outbuildings are currently in receipt of a clean television and sound feed from the Chamber: Mr. Speaker's residence; the office of Mr. Speaker's Secretary; the office of the Chairman of Ways and Means; the office of the Supervisor of Broadcasting; and the Press Gallery (within which some broadcasting organisations have made their own separate arrangements). There are, of course, also monitors in each of the Division Lobbies, though these do not carry sound.

In addition, the Votes and Proceedings Office, occupied by staff of the Department of the Clerk of the House, is equipped with a sound-only feed. I regret that this was inadvertently included in my answer of 27 June amongst those offices which receive a television feed.

Members' Staff (Overtime)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on the backlog of overtime payments to hon. Members' office staff.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: There is a small backlog of overtime payments caused by many hon. Members giving instructions to increase staff salaries; authorising bonus and other payments and seeking information about their expenditure on office costs consequent upon the recent uplift in the maximum of the office costs allowance. I have been assured that this backlog is being progressed as quickly as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence to show that the incubation period of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle is diminishing; what was thought to be the average incubation period for the disease in 1988; and what is thought to be the average incubation period today.

Mr. Maclean: The evidence from the epidemiological data available so far suggests that since BSE was first identified the mean incubation period may have reduced slightly. However, it would be premature to make a definitive statement about the average incubation period and any changes which may have occurred until data about future cases have accumulated.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there have been any occurrences of spongiform encephalopathies in animals in London zoo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A spongiform encephalopathy was confirmed in an Arabian oryx and a greater kudu in London zoo in 1989.

New Forest

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any restriction is placed on the evisceration of culled deer on New Forest land; and what steps he has taken to restrict the spread of tuberculosis from culled deer.

Mr. Maclean: Surveys since 1971 have shown that the incidence of tuberculosis in wild deer is very low. There are no restrictions on the evisceration of culled deer, although local authorities have been advised to consider extending meat inspection to venison. Tuberculosis in deer was made notifiable in June 1989, and it is for local authorities to take appropriate action when a suspect infected carcase is notified. A proposal providing for compulsory meat inspection of venison is under consideration in the Community.

The practice in the New Forest is that evisceration of culled deer takes place only in a deer larder, where the carcases are inspected. Suspect carcases are kept separate from other carcases and samples are sent to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's veterinary investigation centre for clinical examination. Carcases which are deemed unfit for human consumption are removed from the forests for final disposal to prevent reinfection of the wild population.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of tuberculosis in deer have been recorded in the New Forest during the last three years; and whether Forestry Commission officials routinely examine culled deer for such infection.

Mr. Curry: There have been two confirmed cases of tuberculosis in deer in the New Forest in the last three years. All deer carcases for human consumption are examined by Forestry Commission staff for infection.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his current estimate of the deer population of each species of the New Forest; and how many were culled and by what means during the 1989-90 season.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

	Fallow deer	Sika deer	Red deer	Roe deer
Estimated current population	1,300	85	170	360
Total cull 1989-90	640	26	—	6

All the deer culled were shot.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require the deputy surveyor of the New Forest to reply to the questions submitted to him by Mr. Eric Ashby on 14 and 26 October.

Mr. Curry: The deputy surveyor replied to Mr. Ashby's letter of 14 October on 19 October. His letter of 26 October, received by the deputy surveyor on 30 October, will be replied to soon.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions during the present hunting season the programme for each of the New Forest hunts has been changed; and what were the circumstances, in each case.

Mr. Curry: There was only one change during the present season. For their meet on 13 October the New Forest hounds were given permission to extend their ground over part of an adjacent beat because they believed that people opposed to hunting were likely to attempt to draw hounds on to a trunk road, thus causing a nuisance to the general public.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the permissions to hunt in respect of those hunts licensed to hunt the New Forest, together with details of any special conditions imposed.

Mr. Curry: These documents were placed in the Library on 15 January 1990 in response to an earlier question from the hon. Member.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Forestry Commission has received any complaints concerning the use by followers of the New Forest hounds of mountain bikes to cross open heathland on 3, 10 and 17 September; and what action he proposes to enforce commission regulations relating to such use.

Mr. Curry: The Forestry Commission has received complaints about the use of mountain bikes on open land in the New Forest and is considering what action it may be possible to take.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in respect of damage caused by the New Forest hounds to a recorded badger sett in Markway enclosure on 18 December 1989; and whether such action was in breach of the hunting licence.

Mr. Curry: On 16 December the hunt allowed hounds to mark a disused badger sett, in contravention of its authority to hunt, as it had mistaken it for a fox earth. The hunt was penalised by the loss of one day's hunting.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances the Forestry Commission agrees to variation in the programme of hunts; how much notice is required of such applications; and what steps are taken to minimise nuisance to the general public resulting from such changes.

Mr. Curry: The Forestry Commission is asked only occasionally to agree to variations in the programme of hunts. Requests are received for a variety of reasons, for example the planned programme might be impossible because of the weather. There is no standard period of notice, although some permissions require a week's notice. The commission takes into account any possible nuisance to the general public before agreeing to changes.

Zoonoses Order

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received to date seeking the repeal of the Zoonoses Order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Some representations have been received about the Zoonoses Order 1989 in relation to the compulsory slaughter policy for salmonella-infected poultry flocks. The Government measures are clearly reducing potential sources of salmonella infection and I have no plans to repeal this legislation, although it is kept constantly under review.

Rural Housing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he intends to make to the statement published by Housing Choice on 22 October on set-aside land being used for rural housing, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Set-aside is a scheme operated under European Community rules. Those rules, while permitting the use of set-aside land for non-agricultural purposes, require that the set-aside land be kept in good agricultural condition. The farmer must also continue to exercise legal rights of occupation.

Foodstuffs

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those foodstuffs in which Britain was not self-sufficient in the latest year for which figures are available, indicating in each case the amount of the deficit.

Mr. Curry: Information on production, trade and self-sufficiency for the main basic food commodities produced in the United Kingdom is contained in section 5 of "Agriculture in the United Kingdom": the 1989 edition is available in the Library of the House. The United Kingdom also imports a wide range of tropical and other non-indigenous agricultural products as well as supplies of specialist varieties and out-of-season indigenous type foodstuffs demanded by consumers. Details of trade are contained in the "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" available in the Library of the House.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what would be the cost of extending the environmentally sensitive area scheme into the less-favoured areas in each individual national park and area of outstanding natural beauty in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: I regret that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the cost of such extension since the environmentally sensitive areas scheme covers many different farming types with differing environmental objectives which are reflected in the payment levels.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the maximum increase permitted by European Community rules for each grant made under the hill livestock compensatory allowances; and how much it would cost to implement such increases.

Mr. Curry: The maximum headage payment allowed under the European Community regulation governing the payment of hill livestock compensatory allowances will be 102 ecus per livestock unit from 1 January 1991. This converts, at 1991 green rates, to a maximum of £77·33 per cow and £11·60 per ewe. The current headage rates are:

	Severely disadvantaged area £	Disadvantaged area £
Cows	54·50	27·25
Hardy breed ewes	7·50	—
Other eligible ewes	4·50	2·25

The cost of increasing all these rates to the maximum possible in the United Kingdom would depend on the extent to which other financial ceilings (for example, the limit per hectare) applied, and this cannot be readily assessed. The total costs without taking account of these other ceilings would be of the order of £98 million a year.

There is provision in the European Community regulation for a higher ceiling (121·2 ecus per livestock unit) in areas where the permanent natural handicaps are serious enough to justify the higher level.

East Germany (Food Imports)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps will be taken to ensure that all food supplied into the European Community via an eastern Germany entry point has been processed and packed in accordance with existing European Community regulations.

Mr. Curry: Only food products which meet European Community standards are permitted to circulate within the Community. The German authorities are required by Community regulations, which form part of the package of transitional measures on German unification, to ensure that products not complying with Community standards are not placed on the market in the Community except within the territory of the former German Democratic Republic.

Global Climate Change

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been undertaken or commissioned by his Department since 1985 into the effects of potential patterns of global climate change on United Kingdom agriculture and fisheries.

Mr. Curry: The Department will be spending £121 million on R and D in 1990-91. Much of this research is relevant to the response of agriculture to a changing climate. In 1991-92 my Department expects to spend £1·3 million on agriculture and fisheries projects directly relevant to climate change. Since 1985 relevant R and D topics have included:

The impact of climate change on field drainage.

Methane production by ruminants and its control.

The development of grasses likely to tolerate climate change.

Development of the arable crop model to assess the likely impact of climate change.

The likely impact of climate change on aphid pest incidence.

The effects of CO_2 and aerial gaseous composition on growth and development of horticultural and other crops.

Climate sensitivities of United Kingdom soils with respect to agricultural production.

The effects of future climatic change on agricultural potential in the United Kindom.

Maintenance and improvement of the quality, reliability and availability of sea level data obtained from the national tide gauge network.

Assemblage, analysis and maintenance of a bank of well documented and verified observations from the principal tide gauges round Great Britain.

Geocentric fixing of tide gauge bench marks and thereby removing the inaccuracies due to land movement.

Devise methods of estimating the effects of climatic variation on waves around the United Kingdom.

Estimation of extreme sea levels due to tides, surges and waves.

The economic impact of sea level rise on the South Coast.

United Kingdom sea level trends in relation to climatic change.

The economic impact of sea level rise.

Climate change in relation to biological oceanography.

Study of CO_2 partial pressure in the ocean surface leading to a fuller understanding of marine controls on atmospheric CO_2.

Continuous plankton recorder for measurement of phytoplankton variations including responses to climate change.

Undulating oceanographic recorder for vertical assessment of phytoplankton variations including responses to climate change.

Variation of fish stock recruitment in response to planetary scale climatic changes.

Salmonella

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the incidence of salmonella typhymurium currently being found in egg-laying flocks and on the rate at the same time last year.

Mr. Maclean: Thirty-three incidents of salmonella typhymurium in laying flocks (including pullets) were reported to the Ministry in the eight-week period ending on 26 October 1990, compared with eight such reports in the corresponding period in 1989. These figures relate to reports under the Zoonoses Orders and may include cases where the presence of salmonella typhymurium was not confirmed following a detailed on-farm investigation. Sixteen pullet and laying flocks infected with salmonella typhymurium have been compulsorily slaughtered in the first nine months of 1990, compared with 24 in 1989 following the introduction of the slaughter policy in April of that year.

Pesticide Residues

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what prosecutions have been instigated by his Department in respect of those suppliers found to be in possession of produce tainted with pesticide residues above the maximum residue limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have an extensive surveillance monitoring programme. Results for 1988-89 covering over 80,000 pesticide/commodity combinations were published recently. They show that only 2 per cent. of produce contained residues above MRLs (including proposed MRLs) and in every case, action has been taken to avoid recurrence. Details are set out in the report of the working party on pesticide residues published by HMSO on 27 September. The results of enforcement monitoring are appended to this report. A copy is being placed in the Library.

Cattle Records

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to introduce his new measures to amend cattle breeding and movement records; and if he will make a statement on the responses he has received to his consultation document of 1 June,

Mr. Curry: The Bovine Animals (Identification, Marketing and Breeding Records) Order 1990 (SI 1990/1867) and the Movement of Animals (Records) (Amendment) Order 1990 (SI 1990/1868) came into force on 15 October, following a supportive response to the consultation document.

Hedgerows

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many miles of hedgerows have been removed, and at what cost to the Exchequer, in the northern region for the year 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sudan

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether DG VI of the European Community has purchased any food from Sudan since July of this year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Lady to the final paragraph of my answer of 19 October at column 936. Detailed statistics are not available for the period since July 1990, but I understand that small quantities of similar foodstuffs to those set out in my earlier reply have been purchased by DG VI during the last three months.

THE ARTS

Royal Shakespeare Company

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on future subsidy of the Royal Shakespeare Company at the Barbican.

Mr. Mellor: This is a matter for the Arts Council. I understand that the chairman of the Arts Council is in close touch with the Royal Shakespeare Company about its financial position. I am being kept informed of developments.

Public Lending Rights

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Minister for the Arts by what amounts payments to authors from the public lending rights fund will increase this year; and whether he has any plans to increase the sum allocated to the fund.

Mr. Mellor: The Registrar of Public Lending Right cannot calculate payments to authors for this year until Parliament has approved the necessary rate per loan. The fund currently stands at £3·5 million. My predecessor announced increases of £1 million for 1991-92 and £0·25 million for 1992-93, subject to parliamentary approval.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list in the Official Report the figures for the number of loans and size of the public lending right funds on which the public lending right registrar has set the rate per loan for eligible loans from public libraries under the public lending right scheme for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 30 October 1990]: The figures on which the registrar has based his rate per loan calculations for payments to authors under the public lending right scheme for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 are as follows:

	Total Loans million	Fund £ million
1988-89	624	3·5
1989-90	611	3·5
1990-91	583	3·5

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what account is taken of the annual rate of inflation in determining the rate per loan for eligible loans from public libraries under the public lending right scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 30 October 1990]: The rate per loan is dependent on the size of the public lending right fund and on various factors that are unknown at the time when funding is allocated, including the numbers of eligible books and loans. Government policy has been to make substantial increase in the fund at appropriate intervals rather than attempt to anticipate inflation and the other unknown factors through annual increases. Overall, however, the rate per loan has broadly kept pace with inflation.

Arts Expenditure

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing the expenditure by the Arts Council of Great Britain, the regional arts associations, the Scottish and Welsh Arts Council and by the Government in Northern Ireland, per capita, in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 31 October 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Maude: Information on which to base estimates will not be available until the 1990 and 1991 family expenditure survey data have been collected and processed.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will estimate what increase would have to be made in the standard rate of tax if the whole of the community charge and commercial rates in the year 1990 were transferred to income tax; and whether he will set out the basis for such calculations.

Mr. Maude: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before Prorogation. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his reply to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour) on 12 June, Official Report, column 152, on the standard rate of tax and the community charge; and whether he will set out the basis for his calculation.

Mr. Maude: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before Prorogation. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the respective balances of payments between Britain and its European Community partners during 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information on the balance of payments with the European Community is available on an annual basis in the CSO Pink Book. The latest available data are in section 10—pages 6 to 71—of the 1990 edition which is available in the Library. Information on visible trade, on an overseas trade statistics basis, between Britain and individual member states is published in the monthly review of external trade statistics which may also be accessed in the Library.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional average relief receivable by those people with incomes of (a) up to £5,000 a year, (b) between £5,000 and £10,000 a year, (c) between £10,000 and £15,000 a year, (d) between £15,000 and £20,000 a year, (e) between £20,000 and £25,000 a year, (f) between £25,000 and £30,000 a year and (g) over £30,000 a year if the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief were to be raised to (i) £35,000, (ii) £40,000, (iii) £45,000 and (iv) £50,000; and how many beneficiaries there would be in each income band assuming (x) that relief would continue to be available at the higher marginal tax rate where applicable and (y) the relief was restricted to the standard 25 per cent. rate of income tax.

Mr. Maude: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before Prorogation. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Ryder: The location of Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency (CCTA) London-based staff is under review; the rest of the CCTA is already located in Norwich.

ENERGY

Electricity Prices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to reconsider the retail prices index component in the annual price increase allocated to the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Nuclear Reactors (Indonesia)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the supply of nuclear reactors to Indonesia would not lead to the development of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Wakeham: Indonesia is a party to the non-proliferation treaty. Any export of nuclear materials, equipment or technology would have to be fully consistent with our obligations under that treaty.

Firm	Date of report	Involving
Kleinwort Benson	7 March 1990	House of Fraser Holdings PLC
James Capel	6 September 1989	Consolidated Gold Fields PLC

Gas Turbine Power Stations

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of gas turbine power stations now under construction and the number planned.

My Department has also been advised, in confidence, of several other proposals for new gas turbine generating stations. It will be for the companies concerned to decide when to make public details of these proposals.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of refuelling is currently being achieved on load by each Nuclear Electric advanced gas-cooled reactor.

Mr. Wakeham: This is an operational matter for Nuclear Electric.

Electricity Distribution Companies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what valuation his advisers have placed on each of the electricity distribution companies, including their share of the National Grid Company.

Mr. Wakeham: The value of the regional electricity companies will depend on a wide range of factors including each company's share of National Grid Holdings plc and on market conditions at the time of sale. Details of the capital structures, future prospects as well as profit and dividend forecasts for each company will be included in the prospectus.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the estimated profits and dividends, respectively, of each of the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest estimate of remaining gas reserves on the United Kingdom continental shelf is given in the latest edition of the publication "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom" [the Brown Book] which my right hon. Friend presented to Parliament on 30 April 1990.

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table, showing for each of the oil companies the number of invitations made and the number accepted in 1989, together with a breakdown into such categories of entertainment as are distinguished in the records maintained.

Mr. Moynihan: As the answer given on 15 October at column 681 made clear, there are specific rules laid down for the acceptance of gifts and entertainment by civil servants.

I am satisfied that these procedures have been followed.

WALES

House Building

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many new houses were started by Welsh local authorities in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: In 1989, a total of 501 new dealings were started by local authorities.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources he intends to allocate to Welsh district councils for new house building.

Mr. Grist: It is too early to say what resources will be available next year. However, it is a matter for each local authority to determine its own housing priorities within the resources available to it taking account of local needs and securing value for money.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to appoint to the board of Tai Cymru any representatives of Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has no plans at this stage to appoint any new members to the board of Tai Cymru.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of those persons aged 16 years have continued in full-time education in Wales on a county-by-county basis.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information in respect of persons aged 16 years continuing in full-time education as a percentage of the total population aged 16 in 1989-90 is given in the table:

Numbers attending schools[1] and Colleges of Further Education as a percentage of total population aged 16

	Percentage
Clwyd	54·3
Dyfed	57·9
Gwent	55·6
Gwynedd	51·9

Sir Wyn Roberts: Grants for in-service training of teachers in Welsh was increased from £223,000 in the financial year 1989-90 to £1 million in 1990-91. This will be further increased to £1·64 million in 1991-92. Additionally, £0·5 million is available through the grants for education support and training scheme for the appointment of specialist training advisers in each LEA and the Welsh Joint Education Committee. Areas such as Gwent will also benefit from other initiatives, supported by Welsh Office funding, to develop teaching materials for pupils studying Welsh as a second language and the award of financial incentives to student teachers.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what effect he expects the requirement of the national curriculum in Wales for the compulsory teaching of Welsh to GCSE level to have on the teaching of modern languages.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The national curriculum in Wales includes both Welsh and a modern foreign language. This will increase the number of pupils who study a modern foreign language. It is not intended that pupils should be required to study Welsh to GCSE level: there is the alternative for 14 to 16-year-olds of a more limited programme of study taking up about half the time of a GCSE course.

The Welsh Office has been consulting education interests in Wales about the structure of key stage 4 of the national curriculum, including the possibility of greater flexibility and choice. A copy of the consultation letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Inside Lavatories

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses in Wales are without inside lavatories.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest information he has about the number of teachers in secondary schools who are teaching subjects for which they have (a) no degree qualification, (b) no A-level qualification and (c) no O-level qualification.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information is not available in the form requested. Information is not centrally available on the A and O-level qualifications of teachers.

A secondary school staffing survey was conducted in Wales in February 1989 and the results published in the "Welsh Education Statistics Bulletin No. 7", in July 1990. A copy is available in the House of Commons Library. A summary of tables 5.9, 6.5 and 6.6 of that bulletin is given in the following table:

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the trend in admissions for mental illness hospitals and units in the last decade in the age groups for which statistics are kept.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of admissions to mental illness hospitals and units in Wales for 1979 to 1988 is given in the table. Information for 1989 is not yet available.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 1 December 1989, Official Report, column 449, if, on the same basis, he will publish how much money was raised in 1988-89 in prescription charges in Wales; and to what specific purpose this money, credited to class XVII, vote 7, was put.

Mr. Grist: Prescription charges, including receipts from the sale of pre-payment certificates, raised £10·7 million in Wales in 1988-89. This amount, along with other national health service charges, was used to offset the cost of the NHS.

Medical Research

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, pursuant to his reply of 8 May, Official Report, column 58, the review of the arrangements for managing and funding medical research in Wales parallel with developments in England, identified in the White Paper "Priorities in Medical Research", has been completed; and whether the danger he identified of separate development resulting in duplication or wastage of effort has been avoided.

Mr. Grist: The review has yet to be completed. I am confident that unnecessary duplication and wastage of effort will be avoided.

Disability Relief

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in each district council area in Wales received disability relief on their rates bill in 1988-89; what was the average amount of relief per property given in each district; and what is his estimate of the number of households previously receiving disability rate relief which are (a) better off and (b) worse off with the poll tax.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the trend in admissions to mental handicap hospitals and institutions in the last decade in the age groups for which statistics are kept.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of admissions to mental handicap hospitals and units in Wales for 1979 to 1988 is given in the table. Information for 1989 is not yet available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many handicapped children are treated annually at Rookwood hospital with therapeutic care; and how many need therapeutic care for spine and hip deformities;

(2) what is the current staffing of the custom-built special seats section at Rookwood hospital; what was the annual budget of the custom-built special seats section; and if he will give more cash and more staffing to the special seats section;

(3) what is the size of the waiting list of Rookwood hospital concerning children needing therapeutic care and equipment from the rehabilitation engineering section.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give for 1978, 1979, 1988 and 1989 for Paisley social security office the number of (a) claimants and (b) dependents on (i) supplementary benefit or income support and (ii) family income support or family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is as follows:

	1978	1979	1988	1989
Number of claimants receiving Supplementary Benefit/Income Support	[1]11,705	[1]11,717	[1]15,274	[1]15,207
Number of families receiving Family Income Supplement/Family Credit	n/a	n/a	n/a	[2]1,074

Information about the number of dependants is not available.

Notes:

(1) November count of 100 per cent. of cases in action which include a number where payment has ceased but other action was continuing.

(2) Number of families receiving family credit on 24 November 1989 who at the time their award was made were living in the area covered by Paisley social security office.

n/a = Not available.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants have (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully claimed income support, under the hardship rules in each month since March 1990, showing those whose claim was in doubt due to (a) actively seeking work and (b) availability for work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The statistics kept are given in the tables. The remainder of the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Retirement Pension

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of people currently retiring will receive more than the basic rate by way of retirement pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The precise information requested is not available. However, during the six-month period ending 31 March 1989, 57 per cent. of those awarded basic retirement pension received an additional pension from the state earnings-related pension scheme. Many pensioners also received a small award from the earlier graduated retirement pension scheme. In addition, the latest figures available—for 1987—show that 73 per cent. of all recently retired pensioners receive additional income from occupational pensions.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of state retirement pensioners in Easington in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not available.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the community charge benefit case load, as at 30 September, for the Doncaster standard region.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The 31 August 1990 quarterly count of community charge benefit claims in local authorities is not yet available. However, the number of community charge benefit claims as at 31 May 1990 for the Doncaster standard region was 660,000—couples count as one. The May 1990 data reflect a time when local authorities in England and Wales were coping with the introduction of the community charge scheme and were faced with large numbers of unprocessed claims. The May 1990 figure of 660,000 is, therefore, likely to understate the true position.

Earnings Disregards

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the earnings disregards which currently apply to unemployed people in receipt of income support, formerly supplementary benefit; when and by how much they have been increased since 1979; and what they would be worth today if (a) they had been annually increased since 1979 in line with inflation, and (b) they had been annually increased since 1979 in line with average earnings; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the tables.

Weekly earnings disregards applying to unemployed people receiving Income Support:

Couples aged under 60 years who have been continuously in receipt of Income Support for 2 years or more £15.

Single people and couples receiving (or with underlying title to) the disability premium, and lone parents £15.

All other single people and couples £5 each person.

Levels of earnings disregarded under the Supplementary Benefit scheme since 1979:

People required to register for employment	2	4
People not required to register for employment	4	4
Lone Parents	6	[1]12

Kuwait Invasion

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if any increase is planned in the resources available to the social fund to allow for the unpredictable extra expenditure incurred in helping people who have returned to the United Kingdom from Iraq and Kuwait since the invasion of Kuwait.

Mr. Scott: All such expenditure is being recorded and monitored. At this stage it is not thought that extra resources will be required, but close monitoring will continue.

Income Support

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests for attachment to income support in connection with non-payment of the community charge have been made by each regional and island council in Scotland; and how many requests for attachments for outstanding community charge debts have been refused because there were too many existing attachments.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No records are maintained in local offices of the number of applications made by individual local authorities for deductions from income support to clear community charge arrears. No information is available on the reason for refusal of requests for deductions from income support.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants are still receiving transitional protection and have not had a benefit increase since 1987; how many of these are people with disabilities; and how many are pensioners.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Shortly after last April's uprating benefits, the number of income support claimants receiving statutory transitional additions was about 110,000. About 86,000 of these were receiving a total benefit income at their old supplementary benefit level, of whom around 19,000 claimants were in receipt of the pensioner premium and some 7,000 were disabled people aged under 60.

Special transitional additions for people with former high supplementary benefit additions for domestic assistance are uprated every year. Older and disabled pensioners on income support received a cash increase last October, through improvements to the pensioner premiums which did not erode transitional protection. In addition, increases in mobility allowance and attendance allowance are normally disregarded. As a result of these measures, about 24,000 of the claimants still on transitional protection have received some increase in their total benefit income.

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to recommend changes to regulation 25(2) of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries) (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations 1985 (SI No. 967) in view of the Court of Appeal decision in the case of McKiernon v. the Secretary of State for Social Security in 1989 affecting claims for industrial deafness which are more than five years old; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No. The legality of regulation 25 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries) (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations 1985 has been put beyond doubt by the provisions in paragraph 4(3) of schedule 6 to the Social Security Act 1990.

Social Fund

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each social security office in Newham the number of social fund applications (a) submitted and (b) rejected on grounds of insufficient priority since 5 April in each of the categories (i) grants, (ii) budget loans and (iii) crisis loans.

Mr. Scott: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of social fund applications submitted, accepted or rejected over the last two years at the Seaham and Peterlee offices.

Mr. Scott: Details of applications processed and awards made can be obtained from information placed in the Library.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of households claiming income support are repaying social fund loans by deductions from their benefit payments.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 October 1990, c. 226]: I regret that information used to calculate the percentage of income support recipients repaying social fund loans was misinterpreted. Currently 10 per cent. of income support recipients are repaying social fund loans.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals were made to the social security tribunal in 1989 and in the quarters of 1990 for which figures are available; and what is the average time appellants have had to wait for a decision in the specified periods in each standard planning region of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In 1989 there were 161,294 new appeals lodged with the social security appeal tribunals. I regret that similar details for the first quarter of 1990 are not yet available.

The figures show, for each of the social security regions, the average time from the date of lodgement of an appeal to the date of the tribunal hearing for the year ending 31 December 1989.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals in year ended 31 December 1989

North Eastern	22·8
London North	24·0
London South	27·2
Midlands	25·2
North Western	29·1

The figures do not include any time taken between the date of the appeal hearing and the eventual promulgation of the tribunal's decision. Responsibility for this action lies with the president of the social security and medical appeal tribunals and he has advised that a recent survey produced the following results.

Number of weeks from date of hearing to issue of decision

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not available.

Disablement Benefit Gratuities

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by Department of Social Security office in Scotland, the number of disablement benefit gratuities paid under regulation 13 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions 1986.

Mr. Scott: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in (a) London and (b) the United Kingdom have had the entitlement of their first wife to a retirement pension refused because they have entered into a second, polygamous, marriage.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not available.

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to monitor the impact of the community charge on disabled people.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Child Support

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures for each year since 1974-75 showing Government support for families with children, at constant April 1990 prices and in the form of indices 1974-75 = 100, and distinguishing between (a) all families with children, family allowance/child benefit, child tax allowances, non-contributory maternity benefits, (b) two-parent families, family income supplement/family credit, supplementary benefit/income support, rent and rate rebates/housing benefit, community charge benefit and (c) lone-parent families, one-parent benefit, additional personal allowance, family income supplement/family credit, supplementary benefit/income support, rent and rate rebates/housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested but the table sets out such information as is available.

Figures are as defined in the public expenditure White Papers: that is, they include child benefit, one-parent benefit, family income supplement/family credit, maternity benefits and statutory maternity pay, and supplementary benefit/income support and housing benefit payments to one-parent families. They have been supplemented by estimates of the cost of child tax allowances and additional tax allowances for lone parents in the relevant years.

Places of Entertainment (Access)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that blind people and wheelchair users are not refused access to places of entertainment.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply and will write to my hon. Friend.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Developing Countries

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the proposal of the Italian Foreign Minister that European Community members spend 1 per cent. of gross domestic product annually to support developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The Italian Foreign Minister suggested in July 1990 that 1 per cent. of GDP be spent on economic assistance, with one quarter of it going to eastern Europe, one quarter to the Mediterranean countries and one half to the developing countries in general. He has not pursued the idea further with the British Government.

Pergau Hydro-electric Project

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Overseas Development Administration examined a feasibility study of the Pergau hydro-electric project carried out by consultants from Snowy Mountains Co. before offering aid for the project; and what other feasibility studies and appraisal reports were examined before the decision to offer aid was made.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration considered a feasibility study of this project carried out by the Snowy Mountains Engineering Corporation and mounted its own appraisal mission before making an aid offer.

Malaysia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any British aid has been given or offered for road building projects in Malaysia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1989 the Government offered to finance a study of a proposed road building project connecting the Genting Highlands, Frasers Hill and the Cameron Highlands. This offer is still under discussion with the Malaysian authorities. Apart from this offer we have not provided or offered aid for road building projects in Malaysia in recent years.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any British aid has been given or offered for gas turbine projects in Malaysia in 1989 or 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have recently offered £23·485 million from the aid and trade provision to finance waste heat recovery units for the gas turbines at the Connaught Bridge power station. These units will increase fuel efficiency by an estimated 50 per cent. Apart from that commitment, we have not provided or offered aid for gas turbine projects in Malaysia in 1989 or 1990.

Civil Service Pensioners

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if arrangements have been made with the Government of Hong Kong for those of their pensioners who are or were expatriate members of the overseas civil service to receive credit for war service in their pensions.

Mrs. Chalker: The Hong Kong Government are still actively considering whether to include credit for war service in the calculation of pensions for those of their staff who are, or were, members of Her Majesty's overseas civil service. We were told last month that they hope to complete their deliberations by the end of this year. I will inform my hon. Friend when a decision has been made.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Licensed Teachers

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of those individuals granted a licensed teacher award on 30 September have qualifications gained overseas.

Mr. Fallon: A total of 230 licences to teach had been granted up to 30 September 1990 of which 117 licensed teachers hold qualifications gained overseas.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications for the granting of a licence under the licensed teacher scheme had been received and granted by his Department on 30 June and 30 September respectively.

Mr. Fallon: Up to 30 June 1990 a total of 68 applications for a licence to teach had been received by the Department all of which were accepted and licences to teach were granted. From 1 July 1990 to 30 September a further 164 applications were received, of which 162 were accepted and licences to teach were granted.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what qualifications are held by those individuals granted a licensed teacher award on 30 September.

Mr. Fallon: The information is not available in the form requested.

Between 1 September 1989 and 30 September 1990, 230 licences to teach were granted, of which 187 of those licensed teachers are graduates.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of those individuals who have been granted the award of licensed teacher since September 1989 have an existing qualification in the secondary shortage subjects of mathematics, physics, computer and design technology and modern languages.

Mr. Fallon: The information requested is not readily available centrally.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average percentage of their budget distributed by shire counties for local management of schools and what is the figure for Cumbria; what is the overall education budget for Cumbria education authority; and how many schools in Cumbria are participating in local management of schools.

Mr. Fallon: The average share of the potential schools budget distributed to schools by shire counties is 77·4 per cent.; Cumbria local education authority distributes 71·2 per cent. The general schools budget of Cumbria local education authority is £149 million. All Cumbria's 361 primary and secondary schools will have control of their own budgets by April 1992.

Polytechnics

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the bid prices for student numbers in each programme area from each polytechnic together with the relevant Her Majesty's inspectorate's quality assessment.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held by the Department but by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. The PCFC makes it own judgments as to what information about its recurrent funding decisions should be made generally available, and what information should more appropriately remain confidential between the council and individual institutions.

Higher Education Corporations

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many academic and research staff, both full time and part time, are employed in each of the higher education corporations in the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council sector;

(2) how many academic and research staff in each of the higher education corporations are funded from sources other than the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not currently available, but will be collected by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council's new staff record to be introduced for the 1991-92 academic year.

Doncaster LEA

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by school for the Doncaster local education authority (a) the number of teacher vacancies and (b) the subjects or speciality.

Mr. Fallon: Information on teacher vacancies by school is not held by the Department.

For Doncaster local education authority as a whole:

(a) There were 21 teacher vacancies on 18 January 1990, giving a vacancy rate of 0·8 per cent.

(b) Of these 21 vacancies, 11 were in primary schools and 10 in secondary schools. Secondary subjects with recorded vacancies were mathematics, modern languages, art, music and physical education.

Secondary School Teachers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest information he has about the number of teachers in secondary schools who are teaching subjects for which they have (a) no degree qualification, (b) no A-level qualification and (c) no O-level qualification.

Mr. Fallon: In 1988 the proportion of tuition in maintained secondary schools in England provided by teachers who did not have a post A-level qualification in the subject taught or in a closely related one was 20 per cent. The proportion of tuition provided by teachers for whom the subject taught was not the main subject of a degree was 61 per cent. This information is taken from the 1988 secondary school staffing survey, copies of which are available in the Library.

No information is available on the A and O-level qualifications of secondary teachers.

Physical Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to make physical education and games a compulsory part of the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Physical education, which includes games, will be a compulsory part of the curriculum in all maintained schools under the requirements of the national curriculum.

Adult Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 12 July, Official Report, column 313, if he is now in a position to announce his decision on the future of REPLAN.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It remains my right hon. Friend's hope that a decision will be announced later this autumn.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether city technology colleges are subject to the same regulations as local education authority schools so far as requesting the submission of tenders is concerned;

(2) if he will list the rules governing the tendering procedures of city technology colleges;

(3) whether city technology colleges are subject to the European Community regulations so far as requesting submission of tenders is concerned.

Mr. Fallon: There are no specific regulations governing tenders for school buildings. The Department does however recommend that competitive tenders should be invited from a number of approved contractors. Where other methods are chosen, the Department seeks assurance that these represent good value for money. The same considerations apply to the tender process for city technology colleges, which, while subject to European Community regulations, are not governed by specific rules. In each project, the tender method used has been subject to scrutiny by the Department to ensure that effective competition has been obtained.

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of non-scientific staff employed at each of the AFRC institutes since 1980, including those expected to be employed in 1991 and 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: AFRC-funded institutes were restructured during the period 1985-87. The figures for non-science staff in post are shown on the basis of the present institutes of research.

The figures for actual numbers employed at 1 April in the relevant years to 1990 and estimates for 1991 are shown in the table. The number of support staff employed in 1992 will depend on a number of factors, including the funding available to the Agricultural and Food Research Council (AFRC) through the science budget and the extent of commissions from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and externally funded research. The present estimate is that the total number of non-science staff will be about 1,400, including AFRC staff employed in the British Society for Horticultural Research (BSHR).

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 25 October, Official Report, column 282, how many scientific staff were employed at the Letcombe laboratory and Weed Research Organisation prior to closure; how many scientific staff were employed at the former soil survey and land resource centre prior to being transferred to the Cranfield Institute of Technology; how many people were employed at the Plant Breeding Institute prior to purchase by Unilever plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The numbers of science group staff employed at the Letcombe laboratory and the Weed Research Organisation prior to closure were 68 and 75 respectively.

The number of science group staff employed at the soil survey and land resource centre prior to transfer to the Cranfield Institute of Technology was 34.

The number of staff employed at the Plant Breeding Institute prior to purchase of Unilever plc was 223, which included 113 in the science group.

Higher Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many academics in United Kingdom universities, polytechnics and other higher education institutions have resigned to take posts abroad in each of the last 10 years; how many academics from abroad have taken up posts in United Kingdom universities, polytechnics and other higher education institutions, in the same period; and what comparison he has made of the qualifications, experience and subject areas of those who went abroad and those who came to work in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The following information is contained in university statistics volume 1, "Students and Staff" published by the Universities' Statistical Record.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show the breakdown by Wales, Scotland and the standard regions of England of (a) moneys disbursed on education directly by central Government and (b) university grant awards, exclusive of parental contributions whether by central Government or local authorities for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the foreign languages taught in schools in England and Wales in order of popularity.

Mr. Eggar: The five modern foreign languages most commonly taught in maintained schools in England are, in order of popularity, French, German, Spanish, Italian and Russian. A number of other languages are taught to a lesser extent. Schools in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students commenced initial training as educational psychologists in September 1990; and how many of these trainees are (a) fully funded, (b) partially funded through local authority training grants and (c) self-funded.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not available.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average time his Department takes in replying to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Ministerial replies despatched in September took an average of 29 working days to issue. A significant proportion of ministerial correspondence involves inquiries to be made of outside bodies. The rest of the information requested is not readily available.

Mr. Dorrell: I will write to the hon. Member.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to provide for a guaranteed place in a local authority home in any case where supplementary income support for board and lodging payments to elderly people of limited or no means in private or voluntary care residential and nursing homes is inadequate or insufficient to pay the costs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities already have a duty to provide or arrange residential accommodation for elderly people in need of care and attention not otherwise available. Health authorities have similar responsibilities for people who require nursing care.

Children Act

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when local authorities will be able to obtain each of the 12 out of the total of 29 regulations pursuant to the Children Act which are still outstanding.

Mr. Dorrell: We hope to make the regulations well in advance of the implementation date of 14 October 1991.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the reply of 29 November 1989, Official Report, column 299, if, on the same basis, he will publish how much money was raised in prescription charges in England in 1988-89; and for what specific purposes this money, credited for class XIV, vote 2, was put.

Mr. Dorrell: Prescription charges, including receipts from the sale of pre-payment certificates, raised £176·9 million in England in 1988-89. This amount, along with other national health service charges, was used to offset the total cost of the national health service.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the annual figures for the awarding of free prescriptions on the grounds of low income for the past three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is shown in table 1 for the years 1976-86. The figures are for admissions not individuals; an individual may be admitted more than once during the year.

Table 2 expresses these admissions as rates per 100,000 population in each age band.

I will write to the hon. Member with information for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89 in due course.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what reports of people suffering campylobacter enteritidis he has received this year, to date; how many cases of people living in Bradford have been reported; what advice he has issued to combat this disease; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he has taken and what advice he has issued to combat the spread of campylobacter enteritidis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre has received 26,607 reports of faecal isolates of campylobacter by laboratories in England and Wales in the first 39 weeks of this year. There have been 2,618 from the Yorkshire health region. The number from Bradford is not routinely abstracted from national surveillance data.

The advice that the Government have issued to contain the disease relates primarily to good kitchen hygiene and is contained in the publication "Food Safety: a Guide from Her Majesty's Government" copies of which are available in the Library. In May 1989 14 million copies of this food safety leaflet, jointly published by the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, were distributed to the general public.

Income Generation Unit

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the work of the income generation unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The unit's role is to formulate national policy on income generation; to provide a source of advice on this for health authorities and the private sector; to assist health authorities to develop and implement projects, monitor their achievements, and disseminate information and good practice.

I am pleased to report that income generation activity raised £26·8 million for the NHS in 1989-90 and it is expected that £50 million will be raised in 1990-91. The initial top target of £75 million is therefore well in sight. These substantial sums of money are making a significant contribution to improving the care offered to patients by the NHS.

Children (Employment)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to give preliminary approval to proposed byelaws, concerning the employment of children submitted to him by Bradford council on 25 October 1989 and the subject, to date, of seven further letters; when he acknowledged receipt of the various documents; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Bradford council's draft amended byelaws have been considered by the Department; and a response was sent to the local authority on 26 October. I regret the delay; and will ensure that every effort is made to expedite approval of the byelaws.

The Gulf

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantitative provision is being made for casualties from a Gulf war.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 31 October at column 528. Should the need arise, NHS beds would be made available through restrictions on non-urgent admissions. No request for such action has yet been made by the Ministry of Defence.

Unruly Certificates

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will publish a table of all local authority social services departments showing the number of unruly certificates applied for in each department in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by date, and by location, the number of occasions in the past 10 years when public interest immunity certificates have been issued in the three counties of Yorkshire and Humberside concerning matters before coroners and other courts preventing members of the police forces and others within the remit of his Department from attending such courts, and to prevent such courts hearing details of operations, indicating which operations were involved and how many individuals were covered by such certificates.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 17 October at column 820.

ENVIRONMENT

County Hall, London

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will hold urgent discussions with the board of the London residuary body concerning the practical steps needed to retain county hall and its outbuildings in public ownership, following the collapse of the consortium offer in the recent tender application.

Mr. Key: No. The future of county hall is a matter for the London residuary body whose responsibility it remains to dispose of the property in the interests of London charge payers.

Planning Permission

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to include in any future changes to planning legislation provisions governing the extension of planning permission applications to cover the demolition of existing dwelling units.

Mr. Atkins: I am considering the need for legislation in the light of the consultations which we undertook earlier this year.

Pollution Control

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list firms that have been (a) advised on pollution control and (b) prosecuted for discharging pollution into the River Rother by the National Rivers Authority, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution or their predecessors since 1979.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Detailed information about advice given to firms on pollution control, and about prosecutions for water pollution offences, is not held centrally. For information on prosecutions for pollution of the River Rother brought by the former Yorkshire water authority, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 18 January 1990, at columns 360-62. I have asked the National Rivers Authority to write to the hon. Member about prosecutions it has brought since its formation.

Private Contractors

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what advice was sought by Warrington and Runcorn development corporation from its in-house solicitors concerning the redundancy of staff and their re-employment as private contractors; and what advice was proffered;

(2) what information he has on the reasons why Milton Keynes sought outside legal advice concerning the redundancy of staff and their re-employment as private contractors and the advice that was proffered.

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has been issued to local authorities concerning campylobacter enteritis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No specific advice has been issued to local authorities by my Department. The Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food have issued jointly a food safety leaflet advising the public on how to avoid health risks posed by some types of bacteria including campylobacter enteritis. This leaflet was also made available to environmental health officers in local authorities.

Houses of Parliament

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total identified cost of maintaining the Houses of Parliament for the financial years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Maintenance costs, including consultants' fees, were as follows:

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those local authorities that gave grants to regional theatres in 1986, 1987, 1989 and the first six months of 1990;

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the implications of the introduction of local authority waste disposal company rules for existing contracts that local authorities may have previously entered into;

(2) what time limits local authorities will be under to make a decision on the formation of a local authority waste disposal company;

(3) if local authorities will in the future continue to be in a position to deal directly with private sector companies as an option to a local authority waste disposal company;

Mr. Trippier: The proposal has not yet been discussed in the Environment Council. The European Parliament and the economic and social committee have not yet given their opinions on the proposed directive. It is for the EC presidency to decide when the proposal will be discussed at Environment Council.

(2) what reports he has received from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about damage to the environment and the sea bed of the Bristol channel through the dumping of sewage sludge or the licensed input of effluent or other substances;

(3) what are the tests carried out and with what frequency by the National Rivers Authority to check on beaches and adjacent waters for compliance with the European Community bathing waters directive and the award of blue flags;

(4) if he will list the holders of current licences to discharge any effluent into the Bristol channel and give details of the effluents the licence covers.

Mr. Chris Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Satellite Television

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce changes to planning controls over satellite television antennas in the light of responses to the 11 July consultation paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We received over 500 responses to the consultation paper. They revealed a wide divergence of views on the need for stronger controls over the siting of dishes and on the case for two dishes per house. The proposed changes to permitted development rights which we are announcing today are designed to address both these concerns: to increase the controls over installations which would damage visual amenity, especially in sensitive areas, while at the same time to ensure that the development of broadcasting services is not unduly constrained. We have also taken into account the potential use of communal systems and the likely growth of cable networks which over the next few years will contribute significantly to the further protection of the environment.

The main features of the new package being proposed by my right hon. Friend and the Secretary of State for Wales are a general provision that dishes must be sited to minimise their effect on a building's external appearance: this, combined with a new national code of practice, will give planning authorities wider power than they have at present to reduce the obtrusiveness of poorly sited dishes and will provide clearer guidance to installers on how to adopt a more consistently acceptable approach; a requirement that specific planning permission must be obtained for all installations on chimney stacks, walls and roof slopes fronting the highway in national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty and conservation areas, as well as those fronting the waterway in the Broads; a general permission for two dishes per dwellinghouse, but with stricter limits on the size of dishes; new permitted development rights for the installation of particularly small dishes on chimney stacks, where they may be less obtrusive than elsewhere on the building; new permitted development rights for installations on smaller blocks of flats, but subject to the limitations on number and size set out earlier in my reply; new permitted development rights for installations on smaller, non-domestic buildings, subject to the limitations on number and size set out above, except on chimney stacks, walls and roof-slopes fronting the highway.

We have tightened the present restrictions to take advantage of the reductions that are being achieved in the size of dishes. There will of course be further developments in antenna technology over the next few years: and by about 1995 some 65 per cent. of the population may have access to television services through underground cable networks. For these reasons we intend to review the situation again in about two years' time, to ensure that the rules take maximum advantage of technological improvements which can reduce the visual intrusiveness of dishes. I should say now that I cannot envisage any circumstances in which a general permission for more than two antennas per house would be acceptable.

To give effect to these changes, amendments to parts 1 and 25 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to paragraph 6.34 of the environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance?", he will state where the Government have asked local authorities to have particular regard to the conservation of energy as an issue in development plans.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Key: I will write to the hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Treaty

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what opinions he has sought as to the applicability of the veto (a) to amendments to the European Community treaty relating to (i) economic and monetary union or (ii) political union and (b) to any new treaty which may be proposed by member states excluding the United Kingdom as to (1) economic and monetary union and (2) political union; and if he will place any such opinion sought in the Library.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The two forthcoming intergovernmental conferences have been called to amend the treaty of Rome. Such amendments must be agreed by common accord among the member states. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in the House on 30 October, our objective in the IGCs will be to find solutions which enable the Community to go forward as Twelve.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what opinions he has received as to whether other member states of the European Economic Community would be in breach of their Community obligations if they sought to make a new European Community treaty for economic and monetary union or political union exclusive of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The intergovernmental conferences on economic and monetary union and political union have been called under article 236 of the treaty, which states that the conference must determine by common accord the amendments to be made to the treaty. This precludes amendment of the treaty of Rome by fewer than all member states.

Commonwealth

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate for the Commonwealth (a) those countries which have left, (b) those countries which have been expelled, (c) those countries which have been refused admittance and (d) those countries whose applications for membership are pending.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is as follows:

(a) Republic of Ireland (1949)
South Africa (1961)
Pakistan (1972—rejoined in 1989)
Fiji (1987)
(b) None
(c) None
(d) Cameroon.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries of the Commonwealth, indicating the date they achieved Commonwealth status, and their current populations.

Mr. Waldegrave: Namibia, population approximately 1·26 million, joined the Commonwealth on 21 March 1990. The remainder of the information requested is available from the "Commonwealth Yearbook 1990", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Hong Kong

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the present numbers of the population of Hong Kong (a) registered or (b) eligible to register as Hong Kong British dependent territory citizens.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: According to Hong Kong Government statistics:

(a) the estimated number of Hong Kong British dependent territories citizens, principally by birth, descent, registration and naturalisation, is 3·56 million. The number of those who have acquired BDTC status by registration alone is about 5,200; and

(b) the estimated number of Hong Kong residents eligible for naturalisation or registration as BDTCs is 1·9 million.

Iraq and Kuwait (Mail)

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the statement made in the answer to the Adjournment debate by the hon. Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Mr. Lennox-Boyd) on 24 October, Official Report, column 479, if he is now able to give any further details of his Department's efforts to speed mail deliveries to Iraq and Kuwait.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I am pleased to announce that we have now set up a PO box to receive mail from families of detainees and other British nationals prevented from leaving Iraq. We hope this will improve the reliability and speed of delivery of letters to our people in Iraq. The PO box address is:

PO BOX No. 1370
LONDON SW1A 2AW

Cambodia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European Community partners about recent developments in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regular discussions on Cambodia with our European colleagues and others among our friends and partners.

Middle East

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any commitment has been given by the United Kingdom to Israel should Iraqi forces seek to wrest the occupied territories from Israeli control.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Such a commitment has been neither sought nor given.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, on the Palestinian homeland, what is Her Majesty's Government's policy with regard to the exercise by Israel of a veto over the establishment of a Palestinian state.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Palestinian right to self-determination is not negotiable. What is for negotiation between the parties to the conflict is the shape of a comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute.

Defence and Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the topics raised by non-governmental organisations at the six-monthly briefing on defence and disarmament issues held at his Department, on 23 October; which issues were raised most often by non-governmental organisations; and what was the response of non-governmental organisation representatives to the review of Government policy positions presented by the Minister of State.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 31 October, at column 564.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department received a copy of the resolution on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty passed at the annual general meeting of the nuclear free zone local authorities; when a response was sent; and if he will publish the text of the letter of reply in the Official Report.

Mr. Waldegrave: A copy of the resolution was received on 20 September, and an official response was sent on the same day. It is not our policy to publish the content of such correspondence.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) Official Report, 22 October, column 58, he will list the states in the middle east region to which the reply makes collective reference.

Mr. Waldegrave: I referred to all states in the middle east region, which is generally regarded as comprising:

Algeria, Bahrain, Egypt, Iraq, Iran, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Republic of Yemen, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates.

However, it is not our intention that this list should be definitive.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) Official Report, 22 October, column 57, what response was given by the South African Government to the urging of Her Majesty's Government that South Africa accede to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty during the visit of the Minister of State on 19 September.

Mr. Waldegrave: The South African Government expressed their willingness to sign the nuclear NPT provided other states in the region also did so. The South African Government have also expressed their readiness to discuss full-scope safeguards for nuclear facilities with the International Atomic Energy Authority.

Antarctica

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the conference to be held later in November in Santiago, to discuss the future of Antarctica.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Present intentions are that a team made up of officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and the Departments of Energy, Environment and Trade and Industry will represent Her Majesty's Government. Individual participants from these Departments have not yet been nominated.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Development Council will meet on 5 November. Ministers are expected to adopt conclusions arising from a Commission paper on co-operation with the developing countries of Asia and Latin America in the 1990s. The Council will discuss progress on the Lome IV programming exercise which is currently under way and will exchange views on its increasing concern over the situation in the Horn of Africa. Ministers will also discuss the recent review of the tropical forestry action plan.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 8 November to discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

At the Foreign Affairs Council on 12 November Ministers will discuss follow-up action to the special meeting of the European Council held in Rome on 27 and 28 October. The Council will also consider the Commission's proposals for enhancing the Community's relations with Mediterranean countries through a mixture of aid schemes and improved trade and industrial co-operation, and will review progress in the negotiations with EFTA countries on the European economic area, in particular ideas for the industrial framework of the EEA. Ministers may also further discuss implications of German unification, association agreements with east and central European countries, and 10-year guidelines for co-operation with Asian and Latin American countries, and may consider the generalised scheme of preferences scheme in particular for 1991. An informal meeting of the EC/Arab Maghreb Union will be held in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council

The Agriculture Council will meet on 27 November and will discuss the alignment of the Spanish and Portuguese olive oil regimes, and the review of the sugar regime. Other items which may be discussed are the agricultural aspects of German unification, animal welfare standards for pigs and veal calves on the farm, ACP sugar, agriculture and the environment and environmentally sensitive areas, inter-Community trade in fresh poultry meat, meat hygiene aspects of game meat and rabbit meat and plant protection products.

The Budget Council will meet on 16 November to discuss the European Parliament's amendments and modifications to the first reading draft budget.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 19 November to discuss the Commission's proposals for extending European investment bank operations to Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and Romania, with a Community guarantee. The Council may also discuss further work on economic and monetary union in preparation for the forthcoming intergovernmental conference and the Commission's proposals for revisions of the financial perspective as a result of German unification and the Gulf crisis. The presidency is expected to submit a report on the progress on discussions of the Commission's VAT and excise technical proposals. Ministers may also discuss the investment services directive—ISD—a market-opening measure designed to give investment firms operating in one member state authority to set up branches and provide services in other member states. The presidency hopes to reach a common position by the end of the year. It is important that the ISD is implemented simultaneously with the capital adequacy directive and second banking co-ordination directive, by 1 January 1993.

At the Culture Council on 19 November Ministers are likely to be asked to reach agreement on proposals for the protection of national art treasures and on vocational training. There will also be a policy discussion of the MEDIA programme, and discussions of the European Cultural Month and copyright.

The Research Council will meet on 20 November and is expected to discuss co-operation with third countries on research; the EC's role in the international thermonuclear experimental reactor programme; the Community fusion programme including the proposed extension of the joint European Torus facility and aspects of the specific programmes under the third framework programme.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 20 November to discuss 1991 price fixing, the common fisheries policy in the Mediterranean, technical measures for conservation of resources, the effects of German unification on the common fisheries policy and fishery and aquaculture structures as defined in regulation 4028/86.

The Civil Protection Council will meet on 23 November to discuss the introduction of a Communitywide standard emergency telephone number. It will further discuss ways of improving mutual aid between member states in the event of a natural or man-made disaster and discuss further Community co-operation on civil protection.

The Labour and Social Affairs Council is expected to meet on 26 November to take forward proposed directives on the protection of workers from the risks related to exposure to asbestos and biological agents, and to discuss a Commission proposal for Community action for the elderly.

The Industry Council scheduled for 26 November is expected to discuss a Commission communication to the Council on industrial policy, a draft directive on aid for the Community shipbuilding industry and the future of national quantitative restrictions after 1992. Ministers are also expected to discuss the Community textile, biotechnology, semi-conductor and handicraft industries, as well as consider the future of the European Coal and Steel Community treaty, the industrial impact of the Uruguay round, a Commission green paper on standards, and small and medium-sized enterprises.

The Telecommunications Council will meet on 27 November. Ministers will discuss the draft directive on telecommunications terminal equipment aimed at establishing mutual recognition of type approval procedures between member states for telecommunications terminal equipment. A common position was adopted by Ministers at the last Telecommunications Council and the draft is now going through the co-operation procedure with the European Parliament. There may also be an orientation debate on an open network provision—ONP—framework directive aimed at defining the terms and conditions under which telecommunications administrations will be required to give access to users of the telecommunications network infrastructure which was adopted at the last Council and which anticipated the application of ONP conditions to leased lines. A formal draft directive on leased lines is still awaited. An orientation debate is also expected on a draft directive on the protection of personal data processed and transmitted over public telecommunications networks which has been adopted by the Commission as part of a general package of measures aimed at approximating the data protection laws of member states. Ministers will also discuss the draft directive and recommendation aimed at establishing the necessary conditions for the commercial exploitation of digital European cordless telephone technology throughout the Community, and a Green Paper on the liberalisation of satellite services which is about to be published by the Commission. There is also likely to be an orientation debate on Commission plans to publish a Green Paper by the end of the year on proposals for a postal policy for Europe aimed at liberalising the provision of postal services.

At the Tourism Council on 29 November Ministers will consider a proposal for a Council decision on developing tourism statistics within the Community, and may consider papers on rural tourism and tourism and the environment.

Territorial Integrity

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the statements made over the past 10 years by the conference on security and co-operation in Europe about inviolability of frontiers and territorial integrity of states; and what provisions with regard to territorial claims are contained in (a) the charter of the United Nations and (b) the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Hurd: The concluding documents of both the 1980-83 Madrid and the 1986-89 Vienna CSCE follow-up meetings reaffirmed participants' determination to respect and put into practice all 10 principles from the Helsinki final act, which includes statements on the inviolability of frontiers and territorial integrity of states. Neither the charter of the United Nations nor the treaty of Rome contains specific provisions with regard to territorial claims between member states.

India

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited India; and if he was able to take the opportunity to visit the Punjab.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not yet visited India. I visited India on 21 to 26 September, but I did not have an opportunity to go to the Punjab.

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received reports of infringements of human rights in the Punjab from Amnesty International or from any other source.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received Amnesty International's 1990 report, which includes references to human rights abuses in the Punjab. We have repeatedly made clear our concern to the Indian Government that human rights must be respected and have also urged them to exercise the greatest restraint in dealing with the violent challenge to law and order from militant groups.

Gulf States

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the record on human rights in the Gulf states.

Mr. Waldegrave: We deplore all human rights violations, wherever they may occur, and the Governments of the Gulf states are well aware of the importance we attach to the observance of international human rights standards.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from human rights organisations concerning abuses of human rights in the Gulf states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: A number of human rights organisations have made clear their concern. We have made our own views on Iraq's current human rights abuses in Kuwait entirely clear in UN Security Council resolutions including resolutions 664 and 674.

Environment Agreements

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 30 October, Official Report, column 456, to how many of the 140 treaties and agreements concerned with the environment the United Kingdom is a signatory.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Many of the 140 international treaties and agreements in the field of the environment listed by the United Nations Environment Programme in 1989 are regional in application, with no relevance to the United Kingdom. We have, however, signed 60 which have either global or regional importance for us.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time his Department takes in replying to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session in Parliament.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We reply to approximately 85 per cent. of MPs' letters within two weeks. The information requested at (a) and (b) is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

South Africa

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to seek to exert pressure on South Africa through the EEC or the United Nations to relinquish Walvis Bay to Namibia and to accept responsibility for the accrued Namibian debt.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Diplomatic Missions (Parking Fines)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish up-to-date figures recording the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in London in the first six months of the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payments.

The total of 3,842 for the first six months of 1990 represents a 10 per cent. reduction from the figure of 4,292 for the same period in 1989. It compares with nearly 67,000 in the first six months of 1984 before publication of the 1985 White Paper. We welcome this further reduction in unpaid parking fines that has been achieved during 1989 and appreciate the co-operation of diplomatic missions since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall continue to monitor carefully the level of unpaid fines and bring pressure to bear on diplomatic missions to reduce this still further.

Cyprus

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last received representations regarding the Turkish occupation of northern Cyprus; and if he will make a statement concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy toward the occupation.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning amputations, flogging and execution by sword or stoning in Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write to the hon. Member.

TRANSPORT

Passenger Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of passengers carried by bus and rail transport in each year since 1979 and the cost of travel per mile on bus and rail services in real terms for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information available is as follows:

Underground Rail Link, London

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the assessed rate of return on the east-west underground rail link through London.

Mr. Freeman: The east-west crossrail proposal was shown to have a benefit to cost ratio of 1·32:1.

Ports and Docks (Police)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on any plans to reform the law with regard to the employment of police officers at British ports and docks.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 22 October 1990, at column 70.

"Transport of Delight"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain a copy of the recent policy paper published by the Tory Green Initiative, "Transport of Delight", for his departmental library.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department has received a copy.

Summerley Court Aston Airstrip

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, Official Report, 15 October, column 648, whether he proposes to take any action following the issuing of the AAIB report on the accidents at the Summerley Court Aston airstrip on 24 July.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation. The AAIB report has been passed to the CAA and it is for the authority to determine whether any further action is required.

Glasgow-Edinburgh Railway

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about electrification of the Glasgow-Edinburgh railway line and the traffic volumes required to meet the investment criteria.

Mr. Freeman: The £12·5 million electrification of the line between Glasgow and Edinburgh via Carstairs is under way and due to be completed by the spring of 1991. ScotRail is introducing the new class 158 express diesel units on the route from Glasgow Queen Street to Edinburgh via Falkirk and Linlithgow. A full service using these new trains will be in operation by the end of this year. I understand that BR is still considering whether a case can be made for electrifying the route via Shotts. Its forecast of traffic levels will form part of that consideration.

A1

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the traffic flow counts for the stretch of the A1 between Wetherby and Dishforth taken during the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: The average annual daily two-way traffic flows measured immediately south of Dishforth are shown in the table.

Year	AADT (Vehicles)
1980	29,483
1981	30,000
1982	31,400
1983	34,100
1984	36,800
1985	38,600
1986	39,400
1987	40,592
1988	44,321
1989	46,353

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the full details of the current and proposed future works to the A1.

Mr. Chope: I have written to my hon. Friend with the details and placed a copy in the Library.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered in relation to the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road alterations to a dual three-lane motorway.

Mr. Chope: Our present proposals are to widen the M62 between junctions 12 and 17 to dual four-lane motorway and to provide the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road as a dual three-lane motorway. We shall review these standards as our investigations proceed.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will bring public consultation over the proposed Greater Manchester northern and western relief road forward from its originally planned time scale.

Mr. Chope: Public consultation cannot take place until our initial investigations have been completed. These are continuing and are unlikely to be finalised in time to allow any advance in the programme.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the residents of Bury, South in relation to proposals from his Department for the Greater Manchester northern and western relief road.

Mr. Chope: There have been 31 written representations from residents of the Bury, South constituency.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the metropolitan borough of Bury concerning the proposed Greater Manchester northern and western relief road.

Mr. Chope: The metropolitan borough of Bury was consulted on a confidential basis. I cannot therefore divulge the views expressed. It will be formally consulted at public consultation stage. Any responses will be made public after a decision on the options has been made.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from residents in Bury, North over the proposed Greater Manchester northern and western relief road, M62.

Mr. Chope: There have been 42 written representations from residents of the Bury, North constituency.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance was given by his Department to the metropolitan borough of Bury in relation to its unitary development plan and the impact of such plans on his Department's proposals for the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: The council has been advised that unitary development plans should make proper allowance for proposed modifications to the existing motorway and trunk road network which have been announced and for other changes arising from the reviews of the trunk road network. One of the purposes in consulting local authorities on specific road proposals is to allow them to comment on the effect of such proposals on their planning policy.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to compensate the householders in Bury, South whose properties have been blighted as a result of the premature disclosure of the possible route of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: Statutory blight provisions cannot be exercised until a route has been selected for protection against planning development. The Department will, however, consider exercising its discretionary powers of purchase when it publishes proposals for public comment.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bodies were supplied with confidential details of possible routes for the proposed Greater Manchester northern and western relief road.

Mr. Chope: The Department has consulted 33 organisations on an informal and in confidence basis.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department's proposals for the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road were made with the benefit of (a) an environmental impact assessment or (b) an economic evaluation of the costs and benefits.

Mr. Chope: Environmental assessments and economic evaluations will be done before proposals are put forward for public comment.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the completion of the M66 Middleton to Stockport will have upon proposals for the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: There will be no significant effect.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what terms of reference were given to the consultants advising his Department on the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Chope: The consultants have been asked to investigate and report on all the options for improving the M62 between junctions 12 and 17 and for the provision of a new route to the west and north of the existing motorway.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road and his Department's proposals for a route through the parliamentary constituencies of Bury, North and Bury, South.

Mr. Chope: I have nothing to add at present to the comments which I made in a letter to my hon. Friend on 28 August.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priority in the planned expenditure on motorways will be given to the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road; and what is the likely starting date of construction work.

Mr. Chope: Priority in the north-west region continues to be given to the completion of the last 10 miles of the Manchester outer ring road between Denton and Middleton and of the associated A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass. I can give no estimate as to when construction might start on the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Road Repairs

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out his proposals for minimising delays caused by road repairs to main trunk roads and motorways.

Mr. Chope: Since we introduced in 1984 the "lane rental" arrangement for major maintenance contracts whereby the contractor gains a bonus for early completion and is charged for lateness, we have saved traffic delay costs estimated at about £50 million. We will continue to make the maximum use of this type of contract.

In addition, we intend to make greater use of night working, when traffic flows are lower, wherever safety and environmental conditions permit. We are also seeking to improve the management of traffic at roadworks sites by investigating the use of additional narrower lanes, tidal flow systems, and better recovery techniques for broken-down vehicles. In this way we hope further to reduce delays to road users.

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he proposes to introduce information boards explaining works to major roads which are causing traffic delays and indicating why on occasions no activities appear to be being carried out.

Mr. Chope: Since April this year we have increased the amount of information available to drivers at all major maintenance contracts on motorways and trunk roads. Signs explaining the purpose of the works—for example, "Roads repairs reconstructing worn out roads"—have to be erected. Temporary signs are used to explain why from time to time no work appears to be going on—for example, when road materials are hardening or work has to be suspended because of adverse weather.

We are keeping a close eye on this new initiative to make sure that drivers continue to be kept fully aware of the reasons why road works are taking place and hope that it will help to reduce their understandable frustration at unavoidable delays.

Safety Slogans

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to providing slogan signs in lights on bridges spanning trunk and motorway routes urging motorists to heed safety advice.

Mr. Chope: Signing on high-speed roads is kept to the minimum consistent with good direction finding and the provision of other information required by drivers on their journeys. Slogans are generally more suited to other forms of publicity such as leaflets and publicity campaigns.

A19

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to improve the A19 throughout the Easington constituency by the provision of a hard standing.

Mr. Chope: Yes. One metre strips will be provided as part of the future road maintenance programme.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when was the last time he made an official journey from Dishforth to the north via the A19; and whether he has any plans to do so in the near future.

Mr. Chope: Since taking up my current ministerial duties I have not made an official journey from Dishforth to the north on the A19, nor have I any plans to do so.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to (a) improve lighting, (b) improve drainage, (c) improve the access road at Cold Hasledon, (d) install emergency telephones and, (e) provide a footbridge from Peterlee houses to the Peterlee industrial estate on the A19 and throughout the Easington constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: For the section of the A19 in the Easington constituency the Department

a. is considering the provision of lighting on a section of the route;
b. will improve drainage as necessary under normal maintenance operations;
c. is considering the need to improve the junction at Cold Hasledon;
d. has no plans to install emergency telephones, or
e. to provide a footbridge at Peterlee.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average time his Department takes in replying to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average time my Department takes to reply to an hon. Member's letter is three weeks. In the last Session of Parliament the (a) shortest time was one day and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full was five months. Complex questions or problems inevitably take longer to research and resolve.

Motorway Development, Bury

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department intends to seek the views of the people of Bury, South on any proposed motorway development in Bury; and what arrangements he will make to consult the public on any plans produced by his Department.

Mr. Chope: We shall consult fully with all those who live and work in the vicinity of any proposed new or improved route. Residents will be notified by means of circular letters and press advertisements, and local exhibitions will be held.

Traffic Disruption (M1 and A1)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the details of the contract terms involving night and weekend work and speed of completion for road repairs and other works involving disruption of traffic on the M1 and A1.

Mr. Chope: Contracts for the maintenance of the Department's motorways and trunk roads are let under standard terms and conditions. Where practicable, night and weekend working are adopted to reduce traffic disruption, and bonus incentives and charges for late completion are used to ensure that work is completed in the shortest possible time.

M66

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what effect the completion of the M66 Middleton to Stockport will have upon traffic flow forecasts for the M62 over the next 10 years.

Mr. Chope: Completion of the M66 between Denton and Middleton will remove some 10,000 vehicles per day from the section of the M62 east of junction 18. There will be no significant effect on flows west of this junction.

M62

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the volume of traffic currently using the M62 motorway within the Bury, South constituency; and by how much this traffic will increase by the year (a) 1995, (b) 2000 and (c) 2005.

Mr. Chope: The estimate of 1989 average weekday traffic flows on this section of the M62 is as follows:

Motorway link	Vehicles per day
J15 (A666)—J17 (A56)	139,000
J17 (A56)—J18 (M66)	111,000
J18 (M66)—J19 (A6046)	107,700

We have not yet prepared detailed local traffic forecasts, but an indication of possible weekday demand can be obtained by applying the Department's national road traffic forecasts to the figures given above:

Link	1995		2000		2005
	Low	High	Low	High	Low	High
J15—J17	156,000	169,000	171,000	194,000	185,000	220,000

M11

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the proposal for an extension of the M11 through Lincolnshire to Yorkshire with particular regard to the involvement of the private sector.

Mr. Chope: The extension of the M11 is a proposal by a group of local authorities in eastern England. I understand they have appointed consultants to study their proposals. The local authorities are sharing the cost of the study, with contributions from the private sector and grant from the EC. The study is due to report early in 1991.

Coal Imports

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the tonnage of coal imports into Great Britain over the last three years; and if he will indicate the port of entry and country of origin.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information would take too long to provide in the time available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will show the total public expenditure on transport broken down by standard economic planning region in England for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: A breakdown by region is available only for roads expenditure. The information is as follows:

Mr. Chope: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure that the new extensions to the Jubilee line will be accessible by lift to disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

SCOTLAND

Homelessness

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the official homelessness statistics for Scotland in each year since 1978.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information collected by the Scottish Development Department relates only to applications received by local authorities under the homelessness legislation. Not all applicants are assessed by local authorities as being in fact homeless or potentially homeless.

According to returns submitted by local authorities the number of applicant households in Scotland, the number of households assessed by local authorities as homeless, and the number assessed as being threatened with homelessness in each year since 1978-79 are as set out in the table. The figures for 1989-90 are provisional, since returns may still be received from some authorities. In most years, some authorities failed to submit complete returns; part of the increase in the provisional figures for 1989-90 is caused by more comprehensive returns being received from some authorities.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure on (a) books and (b) equipment in schools in Scotland in each year since 1978 in real terms.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is given in the table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. Expenditure on equipment was not separately identified in these returns until 1982-83. There have been some variations from year to year in the recording of expenditure under these two headings. In particular some of the figures for expenditure on library books may include some expenditure on equipment and vice versa.

Expenditure on text and library books and on educational tools, equipment and materials adjusted to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator

1987-88	8·994	22·051
1988-89	10·982	22·522

Note: The figures include expenditure on local authority nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.

Community Care

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what allowance has been made of the level of capital expenditure by local authorities on information technology for community care purposes in the assessment of central Government grants; and what was the estimate of total such expenditure on which this was assessed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Hospitals

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) hospital beds and (b) acute beds for each health board and the total for Scotland in each year since 1979, and the percentage change from 1979-89.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on the number of all national health service hospital beds in Scotland and those beds used for acute specialties, for Scotland and for each health board in Scotland for the years ending 31 March 1979 to 1990 are shown in tables 1 and 2.

Table 1 shows information on the average available staffed beds and indicates the number of beds which are staffed and are available for the reception of in-patients and day cases. Borrowed and temporary beds are included.

Table 2 shows information on bed complements and indicates the number of beds approved by the health board for the admission of in-patient and day cases. Beds in day bed units are not included.

The acute specialty group comprises the following main specialty classifications: general surgery, orthopaedic surgery, ENT surgery, ophthalmology, urology, orthodontics and paediatric dentistry, oral surgery and medicine, restorative dentistry, general medicine, dermatology, rehabilitation medicine, respiratory medicine, surgical paediatrics, medical paediatrics, gynaecology, GP acute, acute mixed and other acute.

The acute specialty group does not include those specialty classifications attributed to the supra-area specialty group, that is specialties: neurosurgery, cardiothoracic surgery, plastic surgery, neurology, radiotherapy and spinal paralysis.

Mr. Rifkind: The available information is for receptions. One reception is counted if one or more warrants arrive for the same person from the same court on the same day. Some receptions relate to warrants arriving at establishments for people already held in custody. Provisional information for 1989 is given in the table:

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have appeared in the High Court charged with drug offences for each of the last five years and in the most recent period for which records are available; and what percentages these figures represent of the total number of appearances in the High Court for all offences.

Mr. Rifkind: The available information is given in the table:

Foxes

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of grant paid to fox destruction clubs in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

1986-87	36,639

1990-91	[1]47,000

[1]Estimated.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost to the Forestry Commission of killing foxes in Scotland, England and Wales for each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The costs incurred by the Forestry Commission on killing foxes are not recorded separately from expenditure on controlling other animals, including rabbits and deer. It is therefore not possible to isolate the amount spent on the control of foxes.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the (a) Scottish population and (b) United Kingdom population was covered by private medical insurance cover in 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Rifkind: No information is available regarding the coverage of private medical insurance in Scotland in 1979. Currently around 6 per cent. of the population are covered by private medical insurance. Figures for the United Kingdom as a whole which do not differentiate between regions show that 5 per cent. of the population were covered by private medical insurance in 1979 while 13 per cent. were covered in 1989.

Housing

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been paid by his Department to support housing associations in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is shown in the table:

1979-80	35·5	0·8
1980-81	50·6	1·3
1981-82	82·4	1·4

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of (a) unfit dwellings, (b) dwellings fit but lacking basic amenities, (c) non-standard dwellings in need of renovations and (d) dwellings afflicted by dampness in (i) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 October 1990]: There is no definition of unfit houses in Scottish housing legislation. Each local authority provides the Scottish Development Department with an annual estimate of the number of houses in its area which fail the tolerable standard for housing, as set out in section 86 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. The Department also collects annually information on local authority houses suffering from dampness and condensation; comparable information for housing in other ownerships is not held centrally. No information is held centrally on dwellings fit but lacking basic amenities or on non-standard dwellings in need of renovations.

The information for the year to 31 March 1989, the most recent available, is set out in the table. Figures for the areas of Greenock and Port Glasgow are not held separately; the details given are for the local authority district of Inverclyde.

	Total number of houses of all types below tolerable standard	Local authority houses with rising and penetrating dampness	Local authority houses with condensation and rising and penetrating dampness
Inverclyde	1,411	Nil	8,091
Strathclyde	25,176	33,374	67,915
Scotland	55,897	48,597	82,827

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many regional directors have resigned from the Scottish Development Agency in the past two years.

Mr. Rifkind: During the period from 1 October 1988, three regional directors have resigned from the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report any criteria which he required the Scottish Development Agency to satisfy before taking decisions to invest in area-based projects in Scotland;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the sums invested by the Scottish Development Agency in the Dundee project in each year since the project was initiated; and if he will express these figures both in terms of the actual sums invested and at 1990 prices.

Mr. Lang: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Hunts (Forestry Commission Land)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that hunts on Forestry Commission land are required not to fill in earths after a failed dig or at any time when an animal might still be in occupation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have brought this matter to the attention of the Forestry Commission and it will be taken into account when the commission gives permission for hunting to take place on its land.

Govan Initiative

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what resources are available to the Govan initiative to fund the annual revenue costs for staffing and related educational costs in respect of the proposed nursery school at Merrick gardens, Ibrox;

(2) what proportion of the money Govan initiative intends to spend on the construction of a nursery school at Merrick gardens, Ibrox, comes from (a) central Government, (b) the Scottish Development Agency, (c) local government and (d) the initiative's own resources.

Mr. Lang: Approval under the urban programme was given on 9 May 1990 for a child care project which was to operate from three locations in the area of the Govan initiative. The approved costs were £279,200 in capital and £247,369 in annual running costs, initially for four years. Central Government grant would meet 75 per cent. of these costs with the balance to be provided by Strathclyde regional council. Merrick gardens was not however one of the proposed locations for this project and the Industry Department for Scotland has not been approached about any proposed change to the approved project.

Sport

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any statistics available on teacher participation in extra-curricular sport (a) in 1980 and (b) in 1990;

(2) when he received the Scottish Sports Council's strategy documents entitled "Sport 2000"; and when he intends to respond;

(3) when he received the Scottish Sports Council's recommendation on school-age sports; and when he intends to reply;

(4) what communication there has been with the chief medical officer over the health-related aspects of the report entitled "Sports 2000", submitted to him by the Scottish Sports Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

British Rail

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the meetings which he has had with British Rail to discuss the proposed withdrawal of Speedlink freight services; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman of British Rail, Sir Bob Reid, on 31 October 1990 when a number of topics were discussed including BR's present review of its Speedlink services.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his assessment of the implications for the Scottish economy and environment of the proposed withdrawal of Speedlink freight services.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: British Rail is currently studying the options for its Speedlink services. My right hon. and learned Friend will give consideration to the implications for Scotland of any proposals which BR puts to the Government in due course.

Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what has been the trend in admissions to mental illness hospitals and units in the last decade in the age groups for which statistics are kept;

(2) what has been the trend in admissions for mental handicap hospitals and units in the last decade in the age groups for which statistics are kept.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Foreign Languages Project

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects replies to be sent to the letters on the foreign languages pilot project sent to the Scottish Office by Mr. and Mrs. W. Toal, 77 Rockmount avenue, Giffnock, Mr. and Mrs. J. Crawley, 113 Ayr road, Newton Mearns, Mr. and Mrs. M. Davies, 2 Tobburn avenue, Giffnock and Mr and Mrs. G. Duffy, 85 Barnfield drive, Giffnock.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Replies were sent on 31 October.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the reply of 29 November 1989, Official Report, column 280, if, on the same basis, he will publish how much money was raised in Scotland in prescription charges in 1988-89; and to what specific purposes this money, credited to class XVI, vote 17 subheads A2 and AZ, was put.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total amount raised from prescription charges in Scotland in 1988-90 was £19·565 million. The majority of prescription charge income was used directly to reduce the costs, borne on subhead A2 of class XVI, vote 17, of the supply of drugs and appliances prescribed or ordered by general practitioners. Other prescription charges, including those collected by dispensing doctors and those for prepayment certificates, were included in subhead AZ of class XVI, vote 17, and were used to offset total expenditure on the vote.

Fish Farming

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the findings of his Department on research into dichlorvos, and its application in fish farming.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scientists at the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries marine laboratory have carried out a number of studies on the effects of dichlorvos on marine species, in particular, lobster and herring larvae, mussels and invertebrates, and on the fate of dichlorvos in sea water. Reports of these studies were placed in the Library on 22 June 1990 and they have also been made available as Scottish fisheries working papers.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has also carried out surveys of farmed salmon as part of its on-going food surveillance work. Between 1987 and 1989, a total of 92 salmon samples were obtained from farms, processors and markets. No residues of dichlorvos were detected. Details of this work will be published in due course.

Community Care

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the programme he intends to follow in providing additional finance to housing associations (a) in the current financial year and (b) in the 1991-92 financial year in order to ensure adequate availability of appropriate housing to match the requirements of his programme for the implementation of care in the community.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for identifying and planning for community care needs lies with social work authorities. As part of that process, social work authorities will be consulting housing associations and other voluntary housing agencies to ensure these needs are met.

My right hon. and learned Friend, through Scottish Homes, funds the overall provision for housing associations. In 1990-91 the total housing association programme is expected to be £208 million. The total for 1991-92 has not yet been determined.

It is for the housing associations themselves, in consultation with local authorities and Scottish Homes, to determine what proportion of their programme is devoted to community care.

Bottle-nosed Dolphins

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the bottle-nosed dolphins resident in the Moray firth are now considered to be at risk.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

AGR Refuellings

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of refuelling is being carried out on load at each Scottish nuclear advanced gas-cooled reactor.

Mr. Lang: Questions about the operational performance of nuclear power stations in Scotland are for Scottish Nuclear Ltd.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show the public expenditure in Scotland on (a) agriculture, fisheries and food, (b) trade and industry, (c) employment, (d) health, (e) educational grants and (f) the administration of justice for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: At least two-thirds of the board members of local enterprise companies are to be drawn from the private sector. Individual appointments are for the local enterprise companies themselves. Board membership will be listed in the published summaries of the companies' business plans.

Self-governing Schools

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the future of Holm school in Orkney; if the parents will be able to vote in a second ballot at an early date if in the first ballot on self-governing status they vote narrowly to reject the option of self-governing status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Carbon Emissions

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates have been made by the Forestry Commission of the potential role of woodland in absorbing carbon emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Free Television Licences

1. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet pensioners' representatives regarding free television licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is not expecting to meet pensioners' representatives about free television licences. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) told the hon. Member on 6 July, we have no plans to change the present concessionary arrangements.

Sunday Trading

2. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has recently received about Sunday trading.

4. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of progress towards finding a compromise between those who support the liberalisation of Sunday trading and those who oppose it.

31. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reform the law on Sunday trading.

45. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy on reform of the Shops Act 1950; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the then Home Office Minister of State, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor), answered a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on 12 July at column 318, 11,321 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and 18 against have been received.

It is clear that there is common ground between the interested parties on certain issues such as removing opening restrictions from small convenience stores and garden centres. We continue to encourage discussion on such matters to reach agreement in those areas where wide divisions of opinion still exist.

Car Security

3. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts motor manufacturers have made in the last year to improve the quality of car security.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware that some motor manufacturers have taken steps to improve the quality of security in their cars, but much more remains to be done. I am currently awaiting a report from the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders on how best progress will be made in Europe towards a new mandatory common standard on car security, what plans manufacturers have for voluntarily building better security into their cars and what manufacturers are doing to encourage car buyers to give a higher priority to car security when buying a car.

Drinking Bans

5. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the experimental ban on drinking in public places.

Mr. John Patten: The results of the byelaw which prohibits the consumption of alcohol in designated areas have been carefully monitored by the Home Office and the local authorities concerned. I am now satisfied that a byelaw of this kind can contribute to a reduction in the unpleasantness all too often associated with drinking. The effectiveness of the byelaw has been demonstrated sufficiently for it to be made generally available subject to applicant authorities satisfying themselves as to a local need and police capacity to enforce it.

16. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the incidence of drunkenness on the streets.

Mr. John Patten: In addition to existing legislation, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary recently announced the general availability of the byelaw prohibiting the consumption of alcohol in certain public places to those local authorities that wish to adopt it. The byelaw is currently in operation on an experimental basis in seven selected areas and has shown that it can effectively control the nuisance of public drunkenness without becoming unduly oppressive. We are also fully supportive of the alcohol and crime demonstration projects that have been established in a number of areas.

Pornography

6. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the results of the review into the law relating to pornography.

Mr. John Patten: This study is a review of existing research findings from a number of countries into the behavioural and other effects of pornography. We expect to publish this review in December.

Tottenham Three

7. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is prepared to set up an internal inquiry to look at the safety of the convictions of the Tottenham Three.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering very carefully a number of representations which have been made to him about the safety of the convictions of Mark Braithwaite, Engin Raghip and Winston Silcott. We will decide as soon as possible whether intervention in these cases would be justified.

Crime, North Yorkshire

8. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in North Yorkshire for 1989.

Mr. John Patten: There were 35,774 offences recorded by the police in North Yorkshire during 1989. This was an increase of 3 per cent. over the previous year. Over 90 per cent. of these offences were crimes against property where effective preventive measures in support of the police by the public can help reduce the opportunities for crime.

Courthouses

9. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new courthouses have been opened in England and Wales in each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: Eleven new courthouses were opened during the period 1987-89—one in 1988 and 10 in 1989. In addition, four others had major improvements carried out to existing buildings.

Crime, West Yorkshire

10. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chief constable of West Yorkshire to discuss crime reduction strategies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend meets chief officers of police on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of policing matters, but he has no present plans for a meeting with the chief constable of West Yorkshire to discuss crime reduction strategies in particular.

Crime Reporting

11. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of extra police officers required to keep pace with the increased work load resulting from the rise in the reporting of crimes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no simple correlation between levels of reported crime and the need for police posts. We hope to make an announcement shortly on the total number of police officers which police forces can recruit in 1991-92.

Police Shifts

12. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning changes to police shift working patterns.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am aware of suggestions which have been made from time to time that the present police regulations are unnecessarily rigid and Home Office officials have been in touch with the Association of Chief Police Officers on this matter. We shall consider further how best to make progress on the issue.

UN Drugs Convention

13. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be in a position to ratify the 1988 United Nations drugs convention.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to ratify the convention early in the new year when all the necessary subordinate legislation under the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990 is brought into operation.

"Supervision and Punishment in the Community"

14. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the responses to the proposals as set out in the Green Paper "Supervision and Punishment in the Community".

Mr. John Patten: We received 159 responses which are now being carefully considered. All the main probation organisations responded, as did a number of other groups and individuals. We intend to make an announcement on the way forward before the end of the year.

Right to Silence

15. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his Department's plans to reform the right to silence.

28. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to change the right of silence rules for suspects interviewed by police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are continuing to consider what changes should be made.

Public Demonstrations

17. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to require those who wish to organise large public demonstrations to (a) contribute towards the cost of the necessary police operation and (b) take out insurance against the possibility of damage caused by vandalism and public disorder.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Recovering from organisers some or all of the costs of policing demonstrations was considered during the review of public order law which preceded the Public Order Act 1986. We concluded that it would not be possible to devise a general, workable provision. We believe that there would be similar difficulties in requiring organisers to insure against the possibility of damage caused by demonstrators.

Sentencing Policy

18. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about sentencing policy for the guidance of magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: We invited comments on the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cm.. 965) and received about 200 responses from organisations and individuals, the overwhelming majority of whom welcomed its proposals.

47. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that offenders receive appropriate sentences.

Mr. John Patten: Our proposals for a coherent statutory framework for sentencing, so that the sentence reflects the seriousness of the crime, were set out in the White Paper, "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cm. 965). We will introduce legislation to implement those proposals as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Fire Service College

19. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of responses expressed support for his proposal to increase direct charges for officers attending courses at the Fire Service college.

Mr. John Patten: All of the organisations which we consulted naturally wished to see the total cost of courses to continue to be met from central funds. We have gone some way towards meeting their concerns by introducing direct charging in England and Wales over a period of three years. The additional costs which fall to local authorities will be taken into account when decisions are taken about the level of revenue support grant.

Police Deployment

20. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he is having with chief constables about the efficient deployment of their police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Chief officers, who have operational control over the deployment of their forces, and police authorities, which are statutorily responsible for providing an adequate and efficient force in their area, are well aware of the need to ensure that police resources are deployed to best effect. The search for greater value for money is a continuing theme in all our discussions with chief officers, and of the work of Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and the Home Office.

Administration of Justice

21. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost for the administration of justice in England and Wales for 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The estimated cost of the criminal justice system in England and Wales for 1989-90 is about £7 billion.

Crime, Cheshire

22. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to reduce the level of crime in Cheshire.

Mr. John Patten: Decisions about the deployment of police resources in Cheshire are an operational matter for the chief constable. But we can all help to reduce crime by taking sensible preventive measures of the kind set out in the Government's booklet "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", and I am pleased to note that there are now over 4,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in the county, covering more than 120,000 households.

Prisons (Privatisation)

23. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on proposals to privatise prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: A number of those who responded to the recent discussion paper "Court escorts, Custody and Security" also referred to our plans to introduce competitive tendering for the operation of the remand centre which is under development at Everthorpe, Humberside. Their views are being considered.

Broadcasting Policy

24. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the BBC to discuss broadcasting policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has regular meetings with the chairman of the BBC at which a range of broadcasting issues is discussed. The last meeting was on 25 September.

Football Matches (Policing Charges)

25. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department will take to monitor and regulate increases in charges for policing football matches in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These charges are a matter for police authorities. We are consulting them, among others, on the terms of a Home Office circular but see no need at present for regulation or monitoring.

Women Prisoners

26. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the number of women sentenced to prison.

Mr. John Patten: The proposals for a coherent statutory framework for sentencing set out in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cm. 965) are intended to ensure that more offenders convicted of less serious, particularly property, offences are punished in the community. The national standards for community service orders, which came into effect on 1 April 1989, asked probation areas to ensure that community service placements are available for women offenders, including those who are pregnant, and offenders with young children. The new edition of "The Sentence of the Court", which reflects the Court of Appeal's guidance that custody should be used only when a court considers it absolutely necessary, refers specifically to women offenders with family responsibilities.

Crime Prevention

27. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss crime prevention measures in the metropolis.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The House will be aware that the commissioner suffered a heart attack on the afternoon of 29 October and is at present in St. Thomas's hospital. All hon. Members will want to wish Sir Peter a speedy recovery and offer their sympathy to Lady Imbert. While Sir Peter is indisposed, the Metropolitan police will be under the command of the deputy commissioner, Sir John Dellow, and my right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting him shortly to discuss a range of matters.

Prison Work Regimes

29. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many of Her Majesty's prisons there is a regime of hard physical outdoors work for younger, healthy inmates; and what plans he has for the extension of such regimes.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information on regime activities in individual establishments is not held centrally but a number of establishments offer opportunities for purposeful and physically demanding outside work. In 1989-90, an average of 1,500 inmates a week were employed on building maintenance and refurbishment, and at 31 March 1990, some 1,900 inmates were employed on farms and gardens activities. It is the policy of the Prison Board to enhance and develop regimes and to ensure that the facilities of prison industries and farms are used to the best effect.

Young Remand Prisoners

30. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representation he has received in respect of 17 and 18-year-olds being held on remand in adult prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have not received recent representations specifically in regard to 17 and 18-year-olds, but I am of course aware of general concern in relation to young persons remanded into custody. Our policy is that wherever possible unconvicted and unsentenced male prisoners under the age of 21 years should be held in separate units. The practical possibilities are limited by the needs of the courts and the constraints of the prison estate. The latter are being alleviated by the prison building programme and certain role changes are also under consideration.

Prisoners (Education)

32. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to give all prisoners a right of access to education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A substantial proportion of the prison service's resources is devoted to basic education and the service aims to provide a variety of opportunities for prisoners. There was a 14 per cent. increase in student hours between 1988-89 and 1989-90.

In addition the Government are considering the recommendations of the third report from the Education, Science and Arts Committee (HC 482) on this matter, and will also wish to take into account any relevant recommendations of Lord Justice Woolf's inquiry into prison disturbances.

Private Security Companies

33. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the terms and conditions within which private security companies offer their services.

Mr. John Patten: There are no standard terms or conditions within which private security companies offer their services. It is for individuals to decide whether there is a need for additional protection of private property or possessions, to that provided by the police and it is for individual contractees to set the terms and conditions of service required.

Prison Suicides

34. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet Judge Tumim to discuss current levels of suicides in British prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, Judge Tumim, has at my right hon. and learned Friend's request been carrying out a review of the prison service's policies and procedures for preventing suicides by prison inmates in England and Wales. I understand that Judge Tumim aims to finalise his report shortly. My right hon. and learned Friend would expect to discuss the report with him.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of Stae from the Home Department if he will list all attempted suicides in 1990 in prison department establishments, stating the age, sex and status; and whether the inmate was sentenced or on remand at the time of the attempt.

Mrs. Rumbold: By 31 October, reports on 136 attempted suicides in 1990 in prison department establishments had been received at the prison service headquarters. Information on age, sex and status and whether the inmate was sentenced or on remand at the time of the attempt is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dispersal Prisons

35. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on staffing levels in dispersal prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: Staffing levels in each of the dispersal prisons are set to take account of the nature of the inmate population and the work to be carried out in the particular establishment. On 1 October 1990 there were 2,566 officers (including principal officers and senior officers) serving in dispersal prisons. On the same date the number of inmates in the dispersal prisons was 2,814, that is an average of 1·1 for every officer in post. The ratio of officers to inmates varies significantly between the prisons reflecting differences in their design, scale and the particular facilities which they contain.

Nationality Applications

36. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the time taken to process an application for British nationality at the present time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In September 1990, the average time taken to complete an application for British citizenship was 23 months for registration and 32 months for naturalisation.

The Tote

37. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the conclusions of the Lloyds report on the privatisation of the Tote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I stated in my reply to my hon. Friend on 12 July at column 328, the report by Lloyds merchant bank will not be published because it was made in confidence and contains commercially and managerially sensitive information. The report is still under consideration and the Government's conclusions will be made known in due course.

Electoral Registration

38. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the additional costs which have been incurred in regard to the registration of electors in 1990; and to what reason he attributes this additional cost.

Mrs. Rumbold: The level of central Government grant to local authorities in respect of electoral registration increases each year to take account of inflation. There has been no other increase in the level of grant for the compilation of the 1991-92 electoral register; nor are we aware that any significant additional expenditure has been incurred by electoral registration officers this year.

Police Efficiency

39. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to improve police efficiency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Police Act 1964 each police authority is responsible for providing an adequate and efficient police force, while my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has a general duty to promote efficiency in the service. In partnership with chief officers and police authorities, therefore, the Home Office is taking and encouraging action aimed at improving police efficiency, including:

1) encouraging civilianisation, which has released some 4,000 officers for operational duties in provincial forces since 1983-84, with a further 800 posts expected to be civilianised this year;
2) inspection of forces by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary and the identification and promulgation of "good practice";
3) a programme of efficiency scrutinies in forces, with 24 scrutinies in provincial forces completed or under-way to date;
4) action to follow up Audit Commission published reports on aspects of police work, and on local audits; and
5) a long-term research programme to improve methods of manpower allocation and develop better measures of police efficiency and effectiveness.

Ethnic Monitoring

40. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to introduce ethnic monitoring of police, probation and court decisions as a general practice.

Mr. John Patten: Ethnic monitoring of both staff and case-load in the probation service will begin in 1991. I hope that the development of monitoring, where this is feasible and useful, together with our wide-ranging programme of research studies will provide coherent information about the treatment of members of ethnic minorities within the criminal justice system.

Strangeways Prison

41. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what lessons have been learned and what actions are proposed as a result of the Strangeways prison riot.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall, of course, consider carefully the recommendations of Lord Justice Woolf's inquiry, when they are received.

A new offence of prison mutiny is to be introduced. Physical security improvements have been identified with a view to denying inmates access to roof areas and facilitating staff access and control. Arrangements for the management of incidents under the reorganised senior structure of the prison service also take account of the lessons from the April disturbances in Strangeways and elsewhere. Also those experiences are being taken into account in the development of strategies for staff training, contingency planning, the protection of vulnerable prisoners and the management of disruptive prisoners.

50. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the dispersal of prisoners as a consequence of events in Strangeways gaol in April.

Mrs. Rumbold: Immediately before the disturbances, Her Majesty's prison Manchester held some 1,639 prisoners. It was not possible to accommodate so large a number in other prisons, and as a result substantial recourse had to be had to the use of police cells. Strenuous efforts are being made to resolve the industrial relations difficulties at a number of prisons which have since added to the problems.

As at 30 October 1990, 748 prisoners are being held in police cells who, but for the loss of prison service accommodation in Manchester, would be held in prison custody there. Twenty-one constabularies are currently involved in this operation and I am most grateful for their assistance.

Domestic Servants

42. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of domestic servants from overseas who, in the last 12 months, have entered the United Kingdom in company with their employers and without work permits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to prepare a reliable estimate.

Refugees

43. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's policy on refugees.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We frequently receive representations on aspects of our policy towards refugees and asylum seekers from hon. Members, interested organisations and the public. That policy is rooted in our obligations under the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees and our general determination to maintain firm and fair immigration control.

Electro-static Detection Analysis

44. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether electro-static detection analysis testing is made available as a matter of routine to the defence in all cases on indictment where the Crown relies on a written statement by the accused.

Mr. John Patten: Such analysis is not conducted routinely. The defence in preparing its case may obtain expert evidence and may seek assistance from the forensic science service. Each party is bound, under the Crown court (advance notice of expert evidence) rules 1987, to disclose to the other any expert evidence which it proposes to adduce in proceedings. In addition, under guidelines issued by the Attorney-General in 1981, the prosecution makes available to the defence any unused material if it has some bearing on the offence charged and the surrounding circumstances of the case.

Violent Crime

46. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance is available to help local police forces suddenly faced with a sharp upsurge of violent crimes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Government support for the police is provided in a number of ways, including an increase in expenditure on the police of almost 59 per cent. in real terms since 1979, an increase in the number of police officers of over 15,300 and specific grant of 51 per cent. on police expenditure. It is the responsibility of chief officers to deploy these resources in response to violent crime or any other priority. It is clear that this is being done to good effect so that there are high clear-up rates for violent crime of which there is a lesser incidence in England and Wales than in most European countries, the United States, Canada and Australia.

Drug Seizures

48. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of drug seizures in Britain in 1990.

Mr. John Patten: In the period 1 January to 23 October 1990, Customs reported a provisional total of 6,471 seizures of controlled drugs in Great Britain. The latest information in relation to seizures made by the police is for 1989, figures for which are published, along with those for seizures by Customs, in table 2.3 of the Home Office statistical bulletin issue 24/90, "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs: Seizures and Offenders dealt with, United Kingdom 1989", a copy of which is in the Library.

Community Service Orders

49. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress being made with community service orders.

Mr. John Patten: National standards to achieve greater consistency in the application of community service programmes were introduced on 1 April 1989; the results of the first year of operation are being analysed and should be available soon. The White Paper, "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public", published earlier this year, outlined new proposals for community penalties, including making community service orders available with probation orders.

Border Controls

51. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about border control between Britain and other European Community countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have nothing to add at present to the statement which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the House on 27 June 1990 at columns 220-21, following the last meeting of Trevi and European Community Immigration Ministers in Dublin in June.

Sexual Offences

52. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will remove the corroboration rules which exist in relation to the evidence of the victims of an alleged sexual offence; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Law Commission is reviewing the law concerning the corroboration of evidence in criminal proceedings including sexual offences. We shall consider the Law Commission's final report and any recommendations to change the law as and when they are made.

Remand

53. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce the numbers of people remanded in custody.

Mr. John Patten: We are promoting a range of practical measures to reduce the numbers of people remanded in custody. These include the development of more bail information schemes and an increase in the number of bail hostel places; encouragement to the courts to take measures to reduce delays; the continuing extension of custody time limits and the development of mode of trial guidelines for magistrates. We have also recently issued a circular on mentally disordered offenders which should help reduce the numbers of such people who are remanded in custody.

Custody (Boys)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many 15 and 16-year-old boys in England and Wales were (a) remanded into penal custody and (b) sentenced to custody in 1989 and during the first six months of 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information is given in the table. Data for 1989 are derived from tables 2.6 and 3.10 of "Prison statistics England and Wales" (Cm. 1221), copies of which are in the Library.

Receptions[1] of male juveniles into prison service establishments in England and Wales: by type of reception

[1]Excludes non-criminal prisoners. Some of the persons received in each category of prisoner were also received in another category.
[2]Provisional figures.
[3]Includes juveniles aged 14.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced and (b) remand prisoners were being held in police cells in England and Wales on the latest date available.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 31 October a total of 1,027 prisoners were held in police cells. It is not possible to provide a breakdown between remand and other classes of prisoners because at present these figures are not collected centrally for all police areas.

Crown Court Trials

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he holds on the number of cases in which defendants initially plead that they are not guilty and elect for their trials to go before a Crown court and subsequently have their cases transferred to a magistrates court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Defendants do not enter a plea before electing Crown court trial and cases committed for trial there are not referred back to be tried at a magistrates court.

Prisoners (Deaths)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all deaths during 1990 of persons detained in prison department establishments, stating in each case the age and sex of the inmate, the cause of the death, the inquest verdict, the establishment where the inmate was held, whether the death occurred in the prison or in an outside hospital, whether the inmate was sentenced or on remand and whether the inmate was occupying a single cell, multi-occupied cell, on the punishment block or in the prison hospital.

Mrs. Rumbold: Almost all the information requested was given in the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 29 October 1990 at columns 351-54. Information about whether the inmate was occupying a single or shared cell at the time of death was not included in that reply, and is not readily available in a number of cases. I shall include this information when I write to the hon. Member for Huddersfield and send a copy of that letter to the hon. Member.

Prisoners (Local Authority Care)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of male and female prisoners in England and Wales had previously been in local authority care.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Income Support Claimants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the latest available year the number of income support claimants sent to prison for failure to pay a court fine.

Mrs. Rumbold: While no statistics on the financial status of prisoners are recorded centrally, such information as is available suggests that perhaps three-quarters of those detained for failure to pay a court fine were in receipt of income support.

Electronic Monitoring Trials

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average total cost of monitoring the 50 defendants placed under surveillance during the recent electronic monitoring trials in Tyneside, Nottingham and London.

Mr. John Patten: The total cost of the electronic monitoring trials was about £700,000 for 50 defendants. But the former figure includes the cost of setting up three different schemes on an experimental basis and the special production of the equipment needed. It would not be sensible to take the figure yielded by dividing the latter figure into the former as a realistic average cost for the use of electronic monitoring on a larger scale.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 50 participants in the electronic monitoring trials in England and Wales reached their trials without being brought to court for an alleged violation, breaching, being additionally charged with an offence, subsequently bailed or absconding during the monitoring period.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, of 25 October, Official Report, column 258, how many names will appear on the provisional electoral register for the Finchley parliamentary constituency which is due to be published in November 1990; and how many of these are expatriate registrations.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested will not become available until the publication of the draft electoral register on 28 November.

Prisons (Medical Care)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints from inmates about medical care in prisons in England and Wales have been received during the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: Records of the type requested are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However the prison service working group on grievance procedures, which published its report in July last year, produced an estimate of the proportion of complaints received at prison service headquarters which related to medical matters. That estimate produces a figure of around 1,100 medical complaints received in the last year of the old grievance procedures, which were replaced on 25 September this year.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the findings of the research conducted by Professor Gunn into the incidence of mentally disordered inmates in the prison system in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: Professor Gunn, Institute of Psychiatry, university of London, was commissioned to produce over a three-year period a definitive statement of the dimensions of the problem of sentenced mentally disturbed offenders in the prison system in England and Wales. This is an important study which will provide a sound basis on which the Department is able to consider the further development of its policies.

The report is expected soon. Following normal practice we intend that once it has then been considered arrangements will be made for its wide dissemination.

Places of Entertainment (Access)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that fire officers are aware of regulations on access to and egress from places of entertainment for people with disabilities.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he last published regulations and guidelines concerning access to places of entertainment for people with disabilities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the neighbourhood watch schemes in the Easington district; and whether he will make extra funds available to extend the schemes.

Mr. John Patten: I will write to the hon. Member.

Remand Prisoners, Durham

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prisoners on remand in Durham prisons in the year 1988-89, and the average length of time of such remands.

Mrs. Rumbold: I will write to the hon. Member.

Arrests

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 July, if he will break down the numbers of people arrested in England and Wales in 1986, 1988 and 1989 by police force areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Work Permits

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he intends to take against the BBC for employing Mr. Patrick Shai on the production of "Land of Dreams" without a work permit having been issued; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many summonses have been issued against employers employing persons without work permits in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Police Officers, Peterlee

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the compliment of police officers in the Peterlee subdivision for the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Peterlee subdivision was merged with the Seaham subdivision on 1 January 1989 to form the Easington subdivision. The table shows only that part of the establishment and strength of the Easington subdivision which covers Peterlee.

Peterlee subdivision

Special Constables

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables has South Yorkshire (a) proportionate to the population and (b) proportionate to other counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: South Yorkshire has an estimated population of 1,293,000 of whom 316 are members of the special constabulary. Appendix 7 of the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary lists the number of special constables and the population of force areas for each police force in England and Wales, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Labour Party Conference

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total policing costs arising from the Labour party conference in Blackpool; and what proportion of the cost will be met by local authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of Lancashire that the additional costs of policing the Labour party conference in Blackpool were £97,545. The additional costs of policing will be met by Lancashire police authority. Under the normal police funding arrangements, the Government contribute both directly through police grant—which is at 51 per cent.—and indirectly through revenue support grant.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time his Department takes in replying to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Waddington: I will write to the hon. Member.

Le Vay Report

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on plans to implement the Le Vay report.

Mr. John Patten: We have now received and published the report of consultants appointed to prepare an assessment of the costs of implementing the main organisational recommendations in the report of the magistrates courts scrutiny 1989 and of an alternative organisational model. We are giving further thought to the scrutiny recommendations in the light of the consultants' advice and of any comments on their work by interested bodies.

Mr. Arthur Scargill

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what permission has been sought by the company fraud department to interview Arthur Scargill, president of the National Union of Mineworkers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The police do not require permission to conduct interviews during the course of their inquiries.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to his most up-to-date estimate of the likely completion date of the company fraud department, Metropolitan police, inquiries into the activities of Arthur Scargill, president of the National Union of Mineworkers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police expect their initial inquiries into the allegations against members of the NUM to be completed shortly.

London Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if staff for new prisons are to be transferred from other London prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: To enable Belmarsh prison to open in April 1991, a total of 353 new prison officers will be recruited. In addition, it is proposed to redeploy to Belmarsh 202 officer posts from a number of other prisons in the London area as a consequence of the transfer of work there from those establishments. The reductions in staffing levels at existing establishments will be effected by means of wastage and voluntary transfers to other establishments.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and for what reasons public interest immunity certificates are issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: A certificate claiming public interest immunity may, exceptionally, be issued by the Secretary of State when information is sought by a party to legal proceedings relating to matters within his responsibility. It is not practicable to give a detailed description of the circumstances where such a claim would be made, but I would issue a certificate only if I was satisfied that it was necessary in the public interest to prevent disclosure of the information.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by date, and by location, the number of occasions in the past 10 years when public interest immunity certificates have been issued in the three counties of Yorkshire and Humberside concerning matters before coroners and other courts preventing members of the police forces and others within the remit of his Department from attending such courts, and to prevent such courts from hearing details of operations, indicating which operations were involved and how many individuals were covered by such certificates.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 17 October at column 820.

Royal Family

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by date and location for the last five years to date the number of intruders who have been discovered on premises (a) owned by members of the royal family and (b) where members of the royal family have been in attendance; and if he will show, in his answer, the sentences imposed by the courts.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rape

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the minimum sentence, the maximum sentence and the average length of sentence given in cases of rape between 1984 and 1990; and what was the average sentence served by rapists.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 19 October 1990]: The information is not available in precisely the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Available statistics do not distinguish between rape, and aiding and abetting rape. The average determinate sentence for offences of rape, and aiding and abetting rape between 1984 and 1988 was as follows:

Year	Average sentence length (months)
1984	44·1
1985	54·2
1986	65·5
1987	74·5
1988	74·5

In both 1984 and 1988, the maximum sentence given for rape was life imprisonment.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase since (a) April 1979 and (b) April 1989 in real average weekly earnings for (i) full-time adult male and (ii) full-time adult female workers, including overtime but excluding absence in the case of (w) manual workers in manufacturing, (x) other manuals, (y) non-manuals and (z) journalists; and if he will provide similar figures for the period April 1974 to April 1979.

Mr. Jackson: Information on the average gross weekly earnings of full-time adult employees at April of the years in question is published in part A of the annual new earnings survey reports with the exception of manuals in non-manufacturing in the last two years, for which the figures are as follows:

	Males £	Females £
1989	207·5	131·4
1990	227·1	143·4

The available information for journalists can be found in table 8 of the reports for 1979, 1989 and 1990. Information on the retail prices index—all items—to convert the figures to 1990 prices is published in table 6.4 of Employment Gazette for April 1989 and 1990, and in table 26 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends for April of earlier years. Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage increase between 1988 and 1989 in the average earnings of full-time adult male manual workers in manufacturing, including overtime and excluding absences, and the corresponding increases for (a) the whole economy and (b) non-manuals in (i) banking, finance, insurance and business services, (ii) banking and finance and (iii) education and health; and whether he will add figures for manuals employed in (c) mechanical engineering and (d) clothing, footwear and textiles.

Mr. Jackson: Information for 1988 and 1989 is published in parts A and C of the respective annual new earnings survey reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of accidents on employment training, fatal, major and minor, for each quarter since June 1989; and how many employer or project-based work placements were closed or rejected in those periods on health and safety grounds.

Mr. Jackson: Information on accidents on employment training is given in the table. Between 1 June 1989 and 30 September 1990, 11 employer or project-based work placements were closed on health and safety grounds.

Quarter	Fatal	Major (b)	Minor

1 October to 31 December	Nil	67	246
1990
1 January to 31 March	1	40	208
1 April to 30 June	Nil	50	269
1 July to 30 September	2	44	214

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole the number of ET trainees who have been recruited under the skill shortage category, in numbers and as a proportion of all ET recruits, for each quarter since ET began; and if he will outline what criteria were used when locally defining what is a skill shortage area of training.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested about the number and proportions of skill shortage entrants to employment can be provided only at disproportionate cost. It would not be appropriate to set national criteria for defining local skill shortage occupations.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, for each quarter since June 1989, what was the number of trainees on employment training who were on placements with employers or on placements in projects;

(2) if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for the latest available period the characteristics of entrants to ET showing (a) the number of male and female entrants, (b) their ethnic origins, (c) their duration of unemployment and (d) whether they had a disability.

Mr. Jackson: In view of the detailed information requested, I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible with the information.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the best estimate he has for the numbers and amounts of ET overpayments which have taken place since the start of the programme, including (a) overpayment of individual ET training allowances, numbers and amounts, (b) overpayment of grants to training agents and (c) overpayment of grants to training managers; how much has been recovered; how much has been written off; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I will write to the hon. Member.

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, the number of all YTS-youth training trainees in training by gender, and the numbers of each sex who had contracts of employment, for each quarter since March 1988.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each month since April 1987 the (a) number of planned entrants for YTS/YT, (b) the actual number of entrants to YTS/YT and (c) the total in training in each month on YTS/YT.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is voluminous. I will arrange for the tables to be placed in the Library.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole, how many YTS youth training providers there are; how many YTS/youth training providers have lost or failed to obtain approved training organisation status in each year since 1988; why ATO status has been refused or withdrawn in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the allocated budget of each of the training and enterprise councils which have become operational, showing the amount contracted for (a) youth training, (b) employment training and (c) enterprise allowance scheme.

Individual budget figures relate to the period from the date when the TEC became operational to the end of the 1990-91 financial year.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many operational training and enterprise council chairmen and individual board members have had to resign; which training enterprise councils they have left; what reasons they gave for their resignations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No operational training and enterprise council (TEC) chairmen have resigned. Nineteen board members have resigned for a variety of reasons, as follows:

TEC	Number	Reason
Bolton and Bury	2	Extra pressure on time
Devon and Cornwall	1	Extra pressure on time
East Lancashire	2	One—company closed down; one—extra pressure on time
Hertfordshire	2	Job changes
North Yorkshire	2	Job changes

Somerset	2	Extra pressure on time
Teesside	2	One—retired; one—moved out of area
Wearside	1	Company closed down
West Wales	1	Firm gone into liquidation
Wigan	2	One—ill health; one—job change

Well over 1,200 key business leaders are involved with TECs and the initiative is some two years ahead of schedule.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Government and training and enterprise councils training schemes he has designated as approved training for the purposes of the Social Security Act 1975; which of these schemes will recruit trainees over the age of 18 years; if it remains the Government's policy that employment training will remain a voluntary scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Only youth training is currently designated as approved training for the purposes of the Social Security Act 1975. Youth training is primarily for under-18s, but some over-18s may also enter. There are no plans to designate employment training. Both youth training and employment training remain voluntary.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a list of those training and enterprise councils which have become operational, the number of board members on each of them and those training enterprise councils which are in the development phase, indicating when he expects each of them to become operational.

Mr. Jackson: Thirty-six TECs are operational and these are listed, with the number of board members for each TEC:

Forty-six TECs are in their development phase, and I confidently expect that they will be operational by summer 1991.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many board members are currently serving on operational training and enterprise councils; how many of them are women or are from an ethnic minority; how many of the training and enterprise councils have a woman or person from an ethnic minority as chairman; which sectors the board members came from, showing those from (a) the private sector, (b) local authorities, (c) trade unions, (d) local education authorities, (e) voluntary organisations and (f) health authorities; and how many training and enterprise councils' chief executives are also board members.

Mr. Jackson: There are currently 487 board members serving on the 36 operational training and enterprise councils (TECs). Of these, 49 are women. None of the TECs operational to date has appointed a woman as chairman.

Information is not kept on the ethnic origin of TEC board members.

The number of board members originating from the sectors identified are as follows:

	Number
Private sector	339
Local authorities	47
Trade unions	26
Local education authorities	16
Voluntary organisations	14
Health authorities	11

There are currently 22 chief executives who are also TEC board members.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish up-to-date figures for Great Britain and each region for each month since September 1989 showing the cumulative number of (a) referrals to ET from the Employment Service to training agents, (b) agreed ET action plans at training agents, (c) starts with ET training managers, (d) the number in training on ET each month and (e) the number of people who left ET each month.

Mr. Jackson: The information on referrals is given in table 1. Information for the period to March 1990 on action plans, starts, in training and leavers is given in tables 2, 3, 4 and 5. Information on action plans is not collected from April 1990. Information from April 1990 about the number of starts with training managers and leavers is not available. In training figures are not available for regions from April 1990. Estimated in training figures from April for Great Britain are given at table 6.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the output-related targets for employment training-youth training for each of the training and enterprise councils which have become operational; what proportion of each of the training and enterprise councils' budgets will be paid only if they achieve these targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Output-related targets for employment training and youth training are negotiated with individual training and enterprise councils and reflect local circumstances. Generally, the agreed target has been 10 per cent. of the total TEC budget; this payment is made for the attainment of relevant vocational qualifications under youth training and jobs secured under employment training.

Back-to-Work Grant

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the back-to-work grant being piloted by his Department and outline what other forms of assistance are available to unemployed people who are just about to start work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Department of Employment is not piloting a back-to-work grant. Unemployed people can take advantage of the advice and help available from employment service staff. They can give information on the benefits available to people in work. These include family credit, child benefit, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

YTS Accidents

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of accidents on YTS —fatal, major and minor—for the periods January to March, April to June and July to September; and how many YTS placements were closed or not accepted in these periods.

Mr. Jackson: Table A gives the YTS accident figures.

Quarter	Fatal	Major[2]	Minor
1 January 1990 to 31 March 1990	1	133	527
1 April 1990 to 30 June 1990	Nil	163	604
1 July 1990 to 30 September 1990	Nil	87	440

[1] Training Agency figures have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Training Agency's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individual been employed.

[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Separate figures for closures and rejections for employer-based and project-based work placements are not kept. Table B gives the reported figures of closures and rejections on health and safety grounds from 1 January 1990 to 30 September 1990.

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest information showing from 9 October 1989 for each region and for Great Britain as a whole the number of unemployed claimants who have (a) been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an adjudication officer for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims (i) allowed or (ii) disallowed and (d) been referred to an adjudication officer for refusing suitable employment; and what is the number of those in (d) who have had their benefit disqualified.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Sellafield and British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what studies have been commissioned by the Health and Safety Executive into radiation risks at Sellafield using the epidemiological case control method; (2) what studies have been commissioned by Her Majesty's Government recently into the health and work records of employees of British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Forth: Following publication of the Gardner report on childhood leukaemia and lymphoma in west Cumbria, the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has commissioned studies to examine other factors which may be relevant to Professor Gardner's findings since there appeared to be a statistical association between the incidence of childhood leukaemia and lymphoma and paternal employment at the Sellafield reprocessing plant. These studies will comprise three parts:

(a) an investigation to see if the case fathers' doses were exceptional compared with the Sellafield work force as a whole;

(b) an investigation into the occupational histories of the case fathers to see if there are any common factors; and

(c) an epidemiological case control study looking at workplace exposure and occupational histories.

The studies will proceed subject to the acceptance by the medical ethical committees of the United Kingdom of the HSE's proposals.

Employment (Over-60s)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report statistics on the employment of over 60s in Britain; and if he will introduce legislation to protect those aged over 60 years who wish to work against prejudice from both public and private employers.

Mr. Jackson: The 1989 labour force survey found that in spring 1989 the number of people aged 60 or over in employment in Great Britain was 1,437,000. We have no plans to introduce legislation on age discrimination, since we believe that it would be difficult to apply and uncertain in its effect. Our policy is to persuade employers to consider all applicants on merit, without imposing arbitrary age limits on recruitment.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average time his Department takes in reply to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Howard: The average time taken in reply to an hon. Member's letter is 20·2 days.

Information on the shortest time and the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Part-time and Temporary Work

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library copies of the responses received from organisations to his Department's consultation document on the European Commission's proposals on part-time and temporary work.

Mr. Forth: No. It is for the organisations which responded to decide whether to publish their views.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer on 22 October, Official Report, column 2, he will place in the Library a list of organisations that responded to the consultation document on part-time and temporary work.

Mr. Forth: I have arranged for the list to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Patrick Shai

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when his Department was notified by British Actors Equity Association that the BBC was employing Mr. Patrick Shai without a work permit; and what action was taken.

Mr. Forth: British Actors Equity Association wrote to my overseas labour section in this Department on 14 February 1990 saying that Mr. Patrick Shai was working. In accordance with standing instructions, this letter was forwarded on 21 February to the Home Office, which is responsible for investigating any possible breach of the Immigration Act.

Health and Safety Offences

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the offences which may be committed by companies concerning the health and safety of employees, in each case specifying the notices which may be served on companies which fail to comply with statutory provisions.

Mr. Forth: The offences for which the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and its agents are responsible are listed in sections 33(1), 36 and 37 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974—the HSW Act—and breaches of the relevant statutory provisions, listed in schedule 1 of the HSW Act, and regulations made under them. If an inspector is of the opinion that an offence has been committed under any of this legislation, he may issue a prohibition or improvement notice in accordance with sections 21 and 22 of the HSW Act.

DEFENCE

Atlantic Conveyor

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial contribution was made by his Department for the replacement of the Atlantic Conveyor in the Falklands war; for what purpose; and why it was not chartered to assist in the transporting of arms and forces to the Gulf military operation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The financial contribution made by the MOD is commercially confidential. As described in Cmnd 8758, "The Falklands Campaign: The Lessons", militarily useful features were incorporated in the vessel, involving principally a prefabricated helicopter flight deck. The vessel has not however been offered in response to our bids for sealift for the Gulf operation as other vessels more suited to the particular requirements were available for charter.

Gulf Crisis

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of chartering Merchant Navy vessels to assist in Gulf military operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the Department's policy to make public how much it has paid for the charter of merchant vessels.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many merchant ships have been chartered by his Department to assist in the Gulf military operation; and what are the names of the ships, sizes and flags of registration.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Forty-three merchant vessels have been chartered to date. Details are as follows:

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the rate of casualties if military action were to commence in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of casualties which might result from any military action could vary considerably depending on a wide range of factors. It is not the practice to comment on details of contingency plans.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 26 October, Official Report, column 340, what other forms of support are being provided to United Kingdom forces by host nations in the Gulf; what other countries apart from the host nations have provided assistance; what form this assistance has taken; what are the further ways in which United Kingdom allies might assist our forces in the Gulf; and what is the exact amount of financial assistance that has been provided by foreign Governments to date for the support of United Kingdom forces in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 30 October at column 856. In addition, as agreed by Ministers at their meeting in Paris on 18 September, the WEU nations continue to provide mutual assistance in the deployment of forces. We are also continuing to negotiate a range of further assistance with our allies. Details of these negotiations are confidential.

HMS Vulcan

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are (a) the establishment and (b) the operational criteria of HMS Vulcan.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Vulcan naval reactor test establishment is owned and operated by the Ministry of Defence with the assistance of contractors. Its purpose is to test and develop naval nuclear reactors. The operational criteria for the establishment are classified.

Tornado

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what laser target designation capability is currently carried by Royal Air Force Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

RAF Squadrons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to scale back the readiness of front-line Royal Air Force squadrons in line with the commitment given in paragraph 14 of the communiqué from the London NATO summit on 6 July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A review of readiness and availability requirements for NATO forces, including those of the RAF, is progressing and a number of measures have been agreed. Details are classified.

Nancekuke Chemical Defence Establishment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has arranged for a control of substances hazardous to health assessment to be made at the former chemical defence establishment at Nancekuke.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We do not see a need for such an assessment. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 17 October 1990 at column 855.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the information given by his Department to the National Rivers Authority on potential leakages of toxic chemicals from the former chemical warfare establishment at Nancekuke;

(2) if he will publish a full list of all chemical wastes and hazardous substances disposed at or near the former chemical defence establishment at Nancekuke.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 17 October 1990 at column 855.

Aircraft Noise

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the actions being taken by his Department in pursuit of the conclusions and recommendations of the NATO Committee on Challenges in a Modern Society report on aircraft noise.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 17 May 1990 at columns 517-18.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, dates and locations of all low-flying exercises conducted over the United Kingdom since 19 May 1989, advance notice of which was given to hon. Members in affected constituencies.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to the creation of new areas in the United Kingdom, additional to the Highlands restricted area, where low flying in instrument meteorological conditions is permitted.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom low-flying system is kept under review but there are no plans to create additional areas where low-flying training using terrain following radar can be carried out in instrument meteorological conditions.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards deployment of new United States air force aircraft in the United Kingdom which have a greater requirement for night and bad weather low-flying training facilities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Any proposal from the United States of America to deploy new United States air force aircraft in the United Kingdom is carefully assessed, taking into account the environmental implications arising from the likely training requirements of the new aircraft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the stipulated minimum period of advance notice required by his Department for requests to use the United Kingdom low-flying system by United States air force units not based in the United Kingdom; and what records are kept of such requests and his Department's responses thereto.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: United States air force units not based in the United Kingdom that wish to use the United Kingdom low-flying system are required to give at least 30 days' notice. Detailed statistics are not however kept of such requests which are infrequent and dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level sorties were undertaken by British military aircraft from Goose Bay, Canada, in 1989; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figure by aircraft type.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is as follows:

	Sorties
C—130	9
Jaguar	321
Tornado GR1	1,415

	Sorties
Tornado F3	4
	1,749

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature and cause of the damage sustained by the Buccaneer aircraft, tail number XT276, of No. 16 squadron Royal Air Force, during exercise "Red Flag" in October-November 1981.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The nature of the damage sustained by Buccaneer XT276 in October 1981 was a bent lug in the locking mechanism of one of the wings. The cause of the damage is unknown, but it is likely to have occurred when the outer wing section was folded while the aircraft was on the ground.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many days in each year since 1985 instrument low-flying training operations were authorised in the Highlands restricted area on the same day as operational low-flying training was authorised in the northern Scotland tactical training area.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost and effort. When, however, low flying using terrain following radar in instrument meteorological conditions is taking place in the Highlands restricted area, other aircraft are excluded.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the changes to procedures in the United Kingdom low-flying system introduced as a result of the air staff review of low-flying procedures in early 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom low-flying system is under continuous review but periodically, a wider and comprehensive study of low-flying procedures is carried out by the air staff. The most recent such study, which was completed in early 1989 confirmed the broad validity of procedures currently in force but introduced minor adjustments to the United Kingdom night low-flying system.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if toss or dive attacks are permitted during low-level simulated air attacks on active civilian airfields;

(2) what is the stipulated minimum period of advance notice required by his Department for requests to carry out low-level mock attacks on civil airfields in the United Kingdom; and what records are kept of such requests and his Department's responses thereto;

(3) what are the operational training advantages of low-level simulated air attacks by combat aircraft being carried out against active civilian airfields, as opposed to disused airfields or active military airfields;

(4) what is the stipulated minimum period of advance notice required by his Department for requests to carry out low-level mock attacks on military airfields in the United Kingdom; and what records are kept of such requests and his Department's responses thereto.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the reason for the omission from his Department's evidence to the House Defence Committee inquiry on low flying of the accident involving a Dutch air force F-16 in the North sea off England on 13 June 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the lateral radius by which military jet pilots flying below 250 ft are instructed to avoid the village of Dalmellington, Ayrshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our practice to release detailed information on flying restrictions in individual areas.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many inert 1,000 lb bombs were dropped by Royal Air Force aircraft during low-level training operations from Canadian forces base Goose Bay in 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The answer is 293.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the dates and locations of the RAF navigation and bombing competition, the Salmond trophy, since 1987; how many low-level sorties were flown in each competition, and by which aircraft types; and what advance notification was given to the press and hon. Members of these events.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force aircraft, and of which types, have been deployed to Canadian forces base Goose Bay for low-level training in 1990; and what were the dates of each deployment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is as follows:

Aircraft Type	Number	Deployment dates
Tornado	9	19 April—31 August
	6	31 May—28 June
Harrier	2	4 September—14 September

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of booked low-flying hours in the United Kingdom in 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The total number of flying hours booked at low level in the United Kingdom in 1989 was 111,037.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the reasons why the United Kingdom military low flying handbook is a classified document.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The United Kingdom military low flying handbook provides information the unauthorised disclosure of which would be undesirable in the interests of the nation.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many detachments of aircraft from RAF Germany have been made to RAF Machrihanish, for the purpose of low-level training, in 1990; and how many low-level sorties were flown during these detachments.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the radius of the avoidance area for low flying established around Lockerbie immediately following the Pan Am 103 disaster in December 1988; what is the radius of the avoidance area currently in force; and what was the date of any changes to the size of the area.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have nothing to add to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) gave the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 15 May 1989 at column 63.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying movements were authorised at less than 250 ft in each of the three tactical training areas in 1989; and on how many days during 1989 such flying was authorised in each of the tactical training areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that he received from my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Mr. Neubert) on 13 June 1990 at column 240.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum speed permitted in Royal Air Force regulations for Tornado aircraft on low-flying training sorties from Canadian forces base Goose Bay.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: RAF low-flying training sorties from Canadian forces base Goose Bay are subject to Canadian regulations which require aircraft to remain at subsonic speeds in the low-level training areas.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the stipulated minimum period of advance notice required by his Department for requests to conduct low flying over the United Kingdom at weekends or on public holidays; and what records are kept of such requests and his Department's responses thereto.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No particular period of notice is laid down for requests to conduct low-flying training over the United Kingdom at weekends or public holidays but any such flying is kept to a minimum, and is generally in support of the territorial forces or units that are not available at other times. Detailed statistics are not maintained of such requests which are dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations within the United Kingdom of (a) the Jaguar wire strike incident on 15 June 1979 and (b) the Harrier tree-strike incident on 8 July 1988.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Jaguar wire-strike occurred one nautical mile north of Shipton-on-Stour. The tree strike to the Harrier was not discovered until after the aircraft had landed, and therefore it is not known where the incident occurred.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the proportion of total low-flying movements in the United Kingdom which occurred in each low-flying area in (a) 1988 and (b) 1989, in the manner provided for earlier years in his Department's evidence to the Defence Committee (HC 120, p. 159).

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As the Defence Committee indicated in its report (HC 120, paragraph 34), raw movement statistics are of limited utility in assessing the relative impact of low-flying in different areas and it is not the general practice to publish information relating to individual low-flying areas. The distribution of low flying movements in the United Kingdom is, however, dependent on deployment and training patterns which do not vary greatly from year to year and the information requested for 1989 and 1988 would be broadly similar to that for 1987.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties were carried out over the United Kingdom in each month from January to the latest available date.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of low-flying sorties flown in the United Kingdom in each month over the period 1 January 1990 to 31 August 1990 is as follows:

Month	Sorties
1990
January	11,263
February	10,152
March	16,362
April	10,871
May	13,329
June	11,709
July	13,704
August	11,309

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force aircraft, and of which types, are currently deployed for low-level training at Goose Bay, Canada; and how many low-level sorties the Royal Air Force is expected to carry out there during 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None. The number of low-level sorties carried out by the RAF in 1990 is expected to be about 900.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the change, in percentage terms, in the number of Royal Air Force fast jet pilots qualified to fly at 100 ft between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Lanyard Exercises

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature and purpose of the Red Lanyard exercise series; what types of aircraft are involved; and what plans exist for further exercises in this series.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Lanyard exercises are parachute exercises designed to keep 5 Airborne Brigade properly trained for its role. There are approximately six exercises per year at various training areas in the United Kingdom. The next exercise is planned to take place in March 1991 at Salisbury plain. A maximum of 15 Hercules aircraft are employed. The colour of the exercise denotes the battalion of the Parachute Regiment taking part; in this case, the first battalion.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature and purpose of the Green Lanyard exercise series; what type of aircraft are involved; and what plans exist for further exercises in this series.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Lanyard exercises are parachute exercises designed to keep 5 Airborne Brigade properly trained for their role. There are approximately six exercises per year at various training areas in United Kingdom. The next exercise is planned to take place in March 1991 at Salisbury Plain. A maximum of 15 Hercules aircraft are employed. The colour of the exercise denotes the battalion of the Parachute Regiment taking part; in this case, the third battalion.

Cannock Chase

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature and purpose of the activity around Cannock Chase for which a new temporary danger area, D299, has been created.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I understand that a temporary danger area D299 was established around Cannock Chase between 24 September and 12 October, following a request from the Staffordshire police in connection with terrorist investigations in their force area.

Morocco

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visits or deployments have been made by Royal Air Force aircraft to Morocco in each of the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Detailed records of all visits or deployments by RAF aircraft to Morocco in each of the last five years are not available. In the last two years however, there have been four visits by RAF fast jet aircraft to Morocco in addition to which RAF transport aircraft have occasionally staged through Moroccan airfields on routine flights.

Arms Sales

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received for offsetting agreements involving the British Army purchasing Abrams M1A2 battle tanks and the United States army purchasing VSEL's AS90 self-propelled howitzers.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Iraq

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present status of the British service men removed from Kuwait to Iraq; and what representations have been made on their behalf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The members of the British liaison team who have been moved to Iraq are being illegally detained. We continue to press for the immediate release of all hostages being held by Iraq, in accordance with international law and United Nations Security Council resolutions.

Air Misses

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list details of the dates, locations, aircraft involved and circumstances of each of the category A air misses between civil and military aircraft over the United Kingdom in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1989, including the height at which each incident occurred.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Foreign Military Aircraft

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on inadvertent releases of weapons outside weapons range danger areas in the United Kingdom by foreign military aircraft since 1979; what is his Department's policy on the collection and monitoring of such information; and if his Department holds copies of the reports of inquiries into such incidents.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have received only one report from a foreign air force about the inadvertent release of a practice bomb in the United Kingdom since 1979; full details of the circumstances were passed to the Ministry of Defence. The Department requires to be informed of any such incidents.

Departmental Reorganisation

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what organisations and sections within his Department presently being housed in London are being considered for dispersal to provincial areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We are currently examining a number of relocation possibilities, including the transfer of further work from London to Harrogate. Details of which organisations and sections of the Department are involved will be announced once final decisions have been taken. Of course, all proposals must be justified on both economic and operational grounds.

Shackleton Aircraft

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the circumstances in which an aircrew would be entitled to fly at will for a period in a Shackleton or Shackleton-type aircraft during military exercises;

(2) which officers of which Air Force rank have the authority to instruct the crew of a Shackleton or Shackleton-type aircraft to fly at will on a course and height which had not been previously planned in the course of a military exercise;

(3) what is the recognised procedure for Shackleton or Shackleton-type aircraft in circumstances during military exercises where the aircraft are not needed for the purposes of the exercise for a short period in the middle of the timetable for the exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Appropriate RAF officers may authorise the aircrew of RAF aircraft such as the Shackleton to fly on a flight path and at a height of their own choosing during a military exercise, provided always that the aircrew can do so safely, and observe the rules of the air, including low-flying regulations where appropriate. RAF aircrew would be entitled to fly their aircraft in this way provided they had the appropriate authorisation, reported their intentions to any appropriate ground authorities, such as air traffic controllers, and flew safely and within the rules.

Because of their slow speed, when RAF Shackleton aircraft are on exercise at some distance from their home base, RAF Lossiemouth, it is normal practice for the aircraft to remain airborne during any short break in the exercise, rather than return to RAF Lossiemouth, land and take off again soon after. It is more cost-effective for the aircrew to remain in the air to conduct continuation training, including practising some of their secondary roles, such as search and rescue.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the circumstances in which a Shackleton or Shackleton-type aircraft can be authorised to engage in low flying below 1,000 ft during military exercises;

(2) whether there are any RAF plans to introduce low-flying training involving Shackleton or Shackleton-type aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Appropriately trained and authorised RAF aircrew are already permitted to fly low (that is, below a height of 2,000 ft) in RAF Shackleton aircraft, provided always that they can do so safely, and observe the regulations governing low flying. If these conditions are met, there is no reason in principle why RAF Shackleton aircraft should not fly below 1,000 ft during military exercises.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the board of inquiry report into the cause of the RAF Shackleton aircraft crash which occurred on the Isle of Harris in the Western Isles earlier this year; if he will list in the Official Report any changes in flying procedures for Shackletons or Shackleton-type aircraft which have been issued since the crash; what is the normal operational role of Shackleton or Shackleton-type aircraft in military exercises; and if it has changed in any way since the crash on the Isle of Harris.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect to publish the military aircraft accident summary concerning this tragic accident in the new year.

The primary operational role of RAF Shackleton aircraft in military exercises is to provide airborne early warning, but the aircraft may also be used in a secondary role of search and rescue, to drop smoke flares. There have been no changes in these roles since the accident. The RAF has not promulgated any specific changes in flying procedures for RAF Shackleton aircraft since the accident.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rents are being paid to landlords in Saudi Arabia for land and buildings occupied by units of the Army, Air Force and Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Many of the facilities used by British forces in Saudi Arabia are being made available by the Saudi Government. Where commercial arrangements are necessary, accommodation and land is being rented at current market rates.

Submarines (Decommissioning)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 29 October, Official Report, column 314, if he will list the submarines that are to be decommissioned; and if he will make a statement on the expenditure already incurred on the current refitting of any of the submarines on that list.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The nuclear-powered submarines which my right hon. Friend has so far decided should be decommissioned following his 25 July announcement are: HMS Churchill, HMS Conqueror and HMS Warspite.

Of these, HMS Churchill and HMS Warspite were in refit. The cost of their refits—including cancellation charges—is still being discussed with the contractors; such costs are in any case commercially confidential.

RAF Bentwaters

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the reason for the construction of 293 new homes at RAF Bentwaters by the United States Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that in 1985 the United States air force contracted for the provision of new married quarters at RAF Bentwaters to correct a critical shortage of accommodation in the local area. Work on these houses started in April 1990 and is due to be completed in late 1991.

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time his Department takes in replying to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Chieftain Tank

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it remains his intention to make a decision on the tank to replace the Chieftain tank by the end of this year.

Mr. Tom King: I had hoped to announce a decision on equipment for our future main battle tank fleet by the end of this year. It is now clear that, owing to the uncertainties created by recent events, I will be unable to do so. I expect to be able to announce a decision in the early spring of 1991.

Surplus Toxic Materials

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning his Department's policy in auctioning to the highest bidder surplus toxic materials in respect of ensuring that such materials are disposed of in a safe and acceptable manner in agreement with waste disposal authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Conservative Conference

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what costs were incurred by his Department in connection with the Conservative party conference in Bournemouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding reply 26 October 1990]: In response to a routine request from the Dorset police, small numbers of specialist military personnel were deployed to assist the police in searching the conference area for explosive devices and on standby for potential bomb disposal tasks. No readily identifiable additional costs to Defence votes arose from this operation.

In addition, two members of my right hon. Friend's private office staff accompanied him to Bournemouth in order to deal with departmental work. Travel, subsistence and communications costs were incurred on Defence votes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Records

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a breakdown of how the latest charge for microfiche records of individual registered companies supplied by the postal sales service was arrived at and what that charge is now.

Mr. Redwood: The charge for the postal sales service was arrived at after taking into account costs for: staff; equipment; accommodation and overheads. The present charge for a microfiche record by post is £5.

Companies House

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much it cost to set up each of the Companies House offices in Birmingham, Manchester and Leeds.

Mr. Redwood: The figure for setting up each office is in the region of £30,000. Items covered include advertising, furniture, computer equipment and microfiche viewing and copying equipment.

Equipment	18,750
Computer installation and Equipment	11,500
Advertising	1,500

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was (a) the date on which each of the Companies House offices was opened in Birmingham, Manchester, and Leeds and (b) for each of these for the last complete month of business, the cost of the facility, the revenue received, and the period covered by the answer for each of these offices.

Mr. Redwood: The dates on which each office opened are as follows:

Manchester	7 December 1989
Birmingham	24 January 1990
Leeds	9 April 1990

The last complete month of business was September 1990. The cost of providing the office facility in each was:

Manchester	3,556
Birmingham	2,371
Leeds	4,132

The revenue received in each office was:

Manchester	12,538
Birmingham	12,749
Leeds	4,640

Correspondence

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average time his Department takes in replying to an hon. Member's letter; and what is (a) the shortest time and (b) the longest time it has taken to reply in full to an hon. Member's letter in the last Session of Parliament.

Mr. Lilley: On average my Department replies to letters from hon. Members within about 13 working days. The shortest time to reply to a letter in the last Session of Parliament was one day. The question about the longest time to reply to a letter can be answered only at a disproportionate cost.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he intends to have discussions with environmental and third-world groups about environmental aspects of the Uruguay round;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government will enter into discussions with environmental and third-world groups about the possibility of adopting environmental approaches to the negotiations in the Uruguay round.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have always welcomed the views of interested parties, including those with environmental concerns, on the issues involved in the Uruguay round; and have taken these into account in contributing to the formulation of Community policy positions. But the round is now entering the final weeks of a four-year negotiation, and it would not be practical to seek to introduce any major new initiatives at this stage.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will take steps to ensure that the Bergen objectives with regard to (a) ensuring trade does not harm the environment and (b) using trade to promote sustainable development are fulfilled;

(2) what action his Department has taken to carry out the commitment given by Her Majesty's Government at the Bergen conference in May, to accelerate within the general agreement on tariffs and trade the dialogue on linkage between environmental and trade policies; how his Department has pursued the Bergen objectives of ensuring that trade does not harm the environment and of using trade to promote sustainable development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have, through the European Community, participated actively in negotiations aimed at clarifying GATT rules related to the export of goods banned and severely controlled domestically for reasons including environmental protection. We will continue to play an active part, in GATT and elsewhere, in the developing international dialogue on the links between trade and the environment.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what action his Department has taken to ensure that the Bergen objectives are incorporated in all general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiations;

(2) if he will make it his policy to seek to ensure that the principles agreed at the Bergen conference are incorporated in all general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have taken steps to persuade the Commission that the Uruguay round negotiations, for example, those on agriculture and technical barriers to trade, take due account of environmental objectives. We will apply this principle where future GATT negotiations have significant environmental implications.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the Government's policy on incorporating environmental conditionality into GATT;

(2) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the principle of environmental conditionality within the general agreement on tariffs and trade and towards the case for blanket exception to general agreement on tariffs and trade rules where the enforcement of those rules would prevent genuine trade-neutral environmental protection.

Mr. Redwood: The implementation of genuinely trade-neutral environmental protection is unlikely to involve breaches of GATT rules. However, in cases where such breaches occur, article XX(b) of the general agreement provides a general exemption to enable measures "necessary to protect human, animal or plant life or health".

This exemption would, in our view, cover measures taken with suitable environmental objectives in mind.

Data Processing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his review of United Kingdom production and trade in data processing machinery and so on is now complete; and when he expects to publish a report on his findings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The report of a study into the broad balance of trade of major companies in the electronics and information technology sector will be laid in the House of Commons Library within a few weeks.

Industry Council

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the discussion on state aids which took place at the last European Community Industry Council on 15 October and the position put forward by the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council discussed a proposal from the presidency that the Commission should be requested to bring forward to the Council a proposal for a regulation under article 94 of the EC treaty determining the rules for the application of state aid policy by the Commission. A majority of member states including the United Kingdom and the Commission itself took the view that such a regulation would unduly fetter the discretion of the Commission in this important area. The Commission committed itself instead to a number of measures designed to involve member states more closely in state aids policy and to introduce greater transparency and legal certainty.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the discussion on the steel industry which took place at the last European Community Industry Council on 15 October and the position put forward by the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Industry Council discussed briefly a United States proposal for a multilateral agreement to strengthen disciplines over steel trade and steel subsidies. Informal contacts with the United States on this issue are continuing. An important point to consider is the need to avoid cutting across the current Uruguay round discussions which will include disciplines on all sectors of industry.

Brewers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect the Grand Metropolitan/Elders IXL pubs-breweries swap will have on the regional brewers with relation to the MMC report.

Mr. Redwood: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Elders IXL Ltd. and Grand Metropolitan plc was published on 16 October—Cm. 1227. The MMC found that the proposed arrangements would be against the public interest unless modified, but none of its conclusions relates specifically to the position of the regional brewers.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average time which has elapsed between the receipt by his Department and the publication of a Monopolies and Mergers Commission report since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: We aim to publish reports of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission as soon as possible after receipt and generally within four to five weeks of their submission by the commission to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The time taken on individual reports varies in relation to the policy issues which arise, and the number of excisions which may be requested by the commercial parties from the published report. Statistics analysing the period since 1979 are not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any changes have been made to Monopolies and Mergers Commission reports between their receipt by his Department and publication.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon Friend the Secretary of State has powers to exclude certain material from a Monopolies and Mergers Commission report, as laid before Parliament and as published, under the provisions of section 83(3) and (3A) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 and under section 17(4) and (5) of the Competition Act 1980. He has no powers to edit or amend such a report. Notes in the text of the relevant reports indicate where such exclusions have been made.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the longest period and shortest period, respectively, which has elapsed between the receipt by his Department and the publication of a Monopolies and Mergers Commission report since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: We aim to publish reports of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission as soon as possible after receipt and generally within four to five weeks of their submission by the Commission to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The time taken on individual reports varies in relation to the policy issues which arise, and the number of excisions which may be requested by the commercial parties from the published report. Statistics analysing the period since 1979 are not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department was consulted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on its report on the British Coal Corporation prior to its submission.

Mr. Redwood: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission did not consult the Department about the content of this report prior to submission to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the reasons for the delay between the submission of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the British Coal Corporation and its publication.

Mr. Redwood: Monopolies and Mergers Commission reports are published as promptly as possible but some delay inevitably arises, first from the process of publication itself and second from the statutory requirement for the Secretary of State to consider whether the publication of any matter in the report would be against the public interest.

Brno Exhibition

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department gave financial or technical assistance to any British company to facilitate participation in the Brno environmental exhibition held from 23 to 25 October.

Mr. Redwood: My Department provides financial and technical support for 6,000 to 7,000 companies at more than 300 overseas trade fairs each year. The programme of support for 1990-91 announced last November, included the major engineering fair at Brno, in which environmental-related products were included, but not the environmental fair.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any Minister or official from his Department attended the environmental exhibition in Brno, Czechoslovakia, held on 23 to 25 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1990]: No Minister or official from my Department visited the exhibition. United Kingdom firms were, of course, free to attend if they chose. However, the Department hoped to support a group of some 60 companies at the Brno engineering fair, which took place in September; 55 companies attended with DTI support. Some of the companies in the British group exhibited equipment which had application in the field of environmental protection. At the request of my Department, Dr. N. S. Wooding, chairman of the East European Trade Council, visited this trade fair, where he met all the British companies present, including those exhibiting independently of DTI support.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British companies attended the environmental exhibition in Brno, Czechoslovakia, held from 23 to 25 October; what proportion this represented of the total; and what information he has on the corresponding figures from West Germany, France, Italy, Sweden and Austria.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1990]: According to information supplied by the organisers of the exhibition, five British companies attended. This was 2 per cent. of the total participation of 250 companies. Figures also provided by the organisers give the following participation level for the countries listed in the question:

Country	Number of companies	Per cent.
West Germany	24	9·6
France	1	0·4
Italy	3	1·2
Sweden	No participation
Austria	61	24·4

Public Expenditure

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will show the total public expenditure on trade and industry broken down by standard region for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most up-to-date figures showing public expenditure on trade and industry broken down by region can be found in the Industrial Development Act annual report for the year ended 31 March 1990. Copies of this report are available in the House of Commons Library.

Bicycles

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the sources of all pedal bicycles sold in the United Kingdom by country of manufacture for the years 1980-89 or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is in the table.

Key: • Imports of bicycles from this country in specified year.
— zero imports.
Note: It is presumed that at least some of the bicycles imported from a particular country in a specified year are sold in the United Kingdom in that year.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of United Kingdom sales of pedal bicycles were imported models; and what percentage were United Kingdom manufactured in each of the years 1980 to 1989 or the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information is as follows:

[2] Import Penetration. Source: Industrial Economic database (DTI). Figures for the rest of 1989 available.
[3] Estimated as 100 per cent. less import penetration. All percentages are calculated in terms of value.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the offences which may be committed by companies relating to the protection of consumers or the general public, in each case specifying the notices which may be served on companies which fail to comply with statutory provisions.

Mr. Redwood: A large number of Acts impose obligations on companies and others for the protection of consumer or the general public. The information is not readily available in the form requested and could not be provided without disproportionate expense.

Junk Mail

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures can be taken by members of the public to prevent the delivery of junk mail.

Mr. Redwood: They can register with the Mailing Preference Service which was set up, with the support of the Post Office, by the main trade associations representing the direct marketing industry. It enables individuals' names to be deleted from the mailing lists held by member organisations. The service claims to cover 80 per cent. of mailing lists.

An application form can be obtained from the service's freepost address.

Postage Stamps

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any meetings with his ministerial counterparts from the other member states of the Universal Postal Union to promote co-operation and in particular to ensure mutual acceptability of postage stamps and obviate the need for air mail stickers.

Mr. Redwood: No, although my officials together with representatives of the Post Office regularly attend meetings with other member countries of the Universal Postal Union to discuss matters of mutual interest. However, the issue of postage stamps and the manner in which mail is exchanged internationally is an operational matter for the Post Office itself.

Business and the Environment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all conferences (a) to which his Department was or has been invited to contribute and (b) where his Department accepted an invitation to contribute, on "Business And The Environment in 1990".

Mr. Redwood: Records of all such invitations received are not held centrally. Nor are acceptances, but research in the time available indicates the Department will have contributed to around 70 such events by the end of 1990.

In addition the Department will itself have organised and participated in over 30 seminars during 1990 on subjects such as waste minimisation, environmental technology and environmental labelling.

Recordings

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the average price at cost (a) wholesale and (b) retail of compact discs, long-playing records, and pre-recorded cassettes; and if he can give an estimate of profit margin at each of these stages.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available from Government sources. The hon. Member may however wish to consult the 1989-90 year book of the British Phonographic Industry which contains some of the information he requests on the basis of data collected by the industry itself.

Single European Market

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the 95 single market measures not yet agreed.

Mr. Sainsbury: Part B of my Department's checklist on progress on the Commission's white paper, a copy of which is deposited in the Library of the House lists 109 measures which require Council adoption. Of these 109, seven have common positions agreed, five are partially adopted and two are political agreements, leaving 95 measures which have not yet been agreed.

Financial Services Tribunal

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to how many cases have been dealt with by the financial services tribunal.

Mr. Redwood: I understand that to date seven cases have been referred to the financial services tribunal. Reports on two cases have been completed, three cases have been withdrawn and two cases are still before the tribunal.

Credit Cards

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will lay orders implementing the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on credit card services in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: I made the Credit Card (Price Discrimination) Order and the Credit Card (Merchant Acquisition) Order yesterday and have laid them today.

On 13 March this year I announced that we had decided to proceed to statutory consultation preliminary to the making of orders under section 56 of the Fair Trading Act.

That consultation is complete and I am today laying the orders to implement our decisions on the MMC report on credit card services. Traders will no longer have to charge cash customers the same price as those paying by credit card. This should lead to a fairer deal for the majority of shoppers. The orders should also allow more banks and financial institutions to come into the credit card business and thereby enhance competition.

The MMC in its report made two recommendations applicable to credit card services:

—the "no discrimination" rule, under which traders are required to charge the same price for purchases made with credit cards as those paid for by cash or other means, should not apply within the UK;

—certain rules restricting the freedom of issuers of Visa and Mastercard cards to act as merchant acquirers, should not apply within the UK.

The Credit Cards (Price Discrimination) Order requires that the credit card companies' "no discrimination" rules be abolished before 7 March 1991 and allows traders to price differentially by that date, if the trader so wishes, on purchases made with credit cards or certain cards not readily distinguishable from credit cards.

Credit card companies will be free if they feel it appropriate to limit traders' price differentials to a maximum of the charge levied on the trader by the merchant acquirer for credit card use—this is currently less than 2 per cent. on average.

The Credit Cards (Merchant Acquisition) Order makes it unlawful, subject to certain exceptions, for payment card organisations to prevent any person authorised by them to carry on business as a payment card issuer from acting as a merchant acquirer for that organisation's cards once the person commences to carry on business as a credit card issuer. Payment card organisations may not require payment cards to be issued before an authorised person may act as an acquirer.

In addition to these orders, we are preparing regulations to be made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987, and for petrol, an order under the Prices Act 1974 to ensure that any differential pricing is clearly indicated to the consumer. It is intended that these will come into force at the same time as the order requiring the abolition of the "no discrimination" rules on 28 February 1991, subject to consideration of comments made in the course of consultation.

In the expectation that these orders will further open the credit card market and bring the benefits anticipated by the MMC from increased competition I have decided not at this time to bring forward a further order to require mechant acquirers to publish certain information on their charges and to submit information to the Director General of Fair Trading. We will watch with the DGFT developments in competition in the credit card market, particularly in the light of the two orders I am laying today, and will consider the position again if necessary.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from citizens advice bureaux regarding the impact of community charge capping on the level of services provided by citizens advice bureaux; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has received a few representations on this subject. Whether and how much a local authority supports a local citizens advice bureau is a matter for that authority. This is the case whether or not the authority is community charge-capped.

Company Legislation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, whether he will seek to introduce legislation to give individual shareholders access to information which the directors have used for decision-making.

Mr. Redwood: No. The imposition of such a requirement would give rise to considerable difficulties for companies given the range of information used by directors and the fact that it is frequently confidential and price sensitive in nature.

Fibreboard Packaging

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to fibreboard packaging into the 1990s to be diplayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Redwood: Arrangements have been made for an exhibition to take place in the Upper Waiting Hall in the week beginning Monday 19 November. Lord Hesketh, Minister of State at the Department of Trade and Industry, will be formally opening the exhibition at 3 pm on Tuesday 20 November.

Fireworks

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures his Department is taking to promote safety at fireworks events and at private bonfire parties; what was the number of injuries involving fireworks for each of the past five years; how much his Department will spend on publicity to promote firework safety this year; and how much was spent on publicity to promote firework safety for each of the past five years.

Mr. Redwood: The Government have phased out the more hazardous types of firework, approved the British standard for the performance and labelling of fireworks, strengthened the legislation against the abuse of fireworks and mount an annual firework safety campaign to persuade the public to treat fireworks with care. Figures for injuries were published in the Official Report on 21 March 1990, at columns 614-16. Each year we spend some £75,000 on publicity and the industry spends a similar amount.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's budget for the current firework safety campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1990]: My Department is spending some £75,000 on this year's firework safety campaign, but we hope that this will attract as it did last year, several hundred thousand pounds' worth of media time as a result.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the law on fireworks, with a view to restricting disturbance to individuals and terror to pets over several weeks prior to 5 November.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1990]: My Department keeps the law on fireworks under review. The present policy of restricting their sale to three weeks before 5 November and one week after, together with the rigorous enforcement of the law preventing the sale of fireworks to the under 16-year-olds and the throwing of fireworks about in the street and other public places, is designed to minimise disturbance to individuals and pets.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to seek to amend legislation relating to the use of fireworks to cover fireworks and fireworks displays other than in the period around 5 November.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 31 October 1990]: There is a voluntary agreement to restrict the sale of fireworks for the four weeks around 5 November, a law against selling fireworks to under-16s and against letting them off in the street. This provides a framework of protection, but my Department is always prepared to look at suggestions for improving firework safety.

Telecommunications

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action has been taken following the work of COST 219 to improve the access of people with disabilities to telecommunication and teleinformation facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The COST programme provides a framework in which European organisations can carry out long-term research on a collaborative basis. The COST 219 project is not due to be completed until 1991. The Royal National Institute for the Deaf and British Telecom are both participating in the project from the United Kingdom.

Net Book Agreement

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to re-examine the workings of the net book agreement.

Mr. Redwood: In both 1962 and 1968 the restrictive practices court found the operation of the net book agreement not to be contrary to the public interest. The Director General of Fair Trading carried out a substantial investigation into the operation and effects of the net book agreement in 1989 to see whether circumstances had changed. He concluded that there was an insufficiently strong basis to justify his making an application to the restrictive practices court for a re-examination of the issues. The possibility of making such an application in the future is kept under review by the director general.

"Waste Doesn't Pay" Seminars

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contribution was made by his Department to the "Waste Doesn't Pay" seminars organised by the Confederation of British Industry.

Mr. Redwood: My Department and the CBI planned the seminars jointly and shared the work of finding speakers. Local organisation was provided by the CBI for 10 seminars and by my Department for 2. My Department also provided publicity material for the whole series of seminars. The seminars have been attended by over 700 people in total.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 22 October, column 55, he will set out the reasons why his Department decided to respond to the request to participate in the "Panorama" programme on Iraq by supplying written replies.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 October 1990]: The terms of the agreement eventually reached with "Panorama" on the participation of my Department in the programme on Iraq were that the programme would provide written questions to which my Department would supply written answers. Some of the answers were used in the programme.

Company Directors (Disqualification)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was, for each of the last five years (a) the number of representations received from liquidators with a view to the institution of proceedings for the disqualification of company directors and (b) the number of prosecutions actually made.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 29 October 1990]: Insolvency practitioners were first required to submit statutory returns and reports on the conduct of the directors of insolvent companies under the Insolvency Act 1985 from 28 April 1986. On 29 December 1986 the relevant provisions of this Act, together with the director disqualification provision of the Companies Act 1985, were re-enacted in the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Insolvency practitioners are required to make returns where they find no unfitted conduct and reports when they believe there has been unfitted conduct.

The statistical information the hon. Member requires on the submissions of reports and returns by insolvency practitioners and the disqualification of company directors in England, Wales and Scotland, covering the period from 28 April 1986 to 30 September 1990, is as follows:

	Conduct reports received[1]	Returns received[2]
1986	232	1,754
1987	2,104	9,148
1988	2,987	6,878
1989	2,037	4,500
1990	2,051	7,373

[1] Unfitted conduct.
[2] No unfitted conduct.

Many of these unfitted reports related to minor, one-off cases of bad conduct. These would not usually result in court proceedings because a court would not consider it sufficient to warrant disqualification. Disqualification proceedings have been commenced in all those cases of multiple bad conduct or where its gravity means disqualification is likely.

	Companies	Directors
1986	—	—
1987	30	41
1988	144	219
1989	163	267
1990	145	224

As some voluntary liquidation and receivership cases subsequently involve court winding-up orders, I set out in the table details of disqualification proceedings commenced in official receivers' cases in the same period:

	Companies	Directors
1986	20	22
1987	110	139
1988	157	202
1989	137	173
1990	83	109

Disqualification proceedings brought against an individual director may include allegations of unfitness emanating from more than one insolvent company.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 178

SESSION 1990-91

22nd October—1st November 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
